The Daily Bull is probably not suitable for those under age 18 and should not be taken seriously... like VHS tapes

Natural Selection

By Dan Maher ~ Daily Bull

Natural selection, survival of the fittest is being jeopardized by the U.S. government. Recently the geniuses in power decided to make it harder to get over the counter medication. The fear is over people being able to get "strong" drugs and being able to create things like meth. So now apparently people with sinusitis and/or colds can be considered drug lords.

So there I was...at Thee Walmart, looking for something stronger for my sinusitis. The product I needed had a card that is supposed to be brought up to the pharmacist. Then just like buying alcohol, I get carded. Not just carded, he takes my license number. Now I'm wondering WTF? So apparently the government, with all of its spare time, decided to make this medication harder to get. Mind you

Blockbuster Ideas

By Nicholas Jimenez ~ Daily Bull

Home movies. They're classic and up to the genius or mania of the director; best of all they're cheap entertainment that can be distributed like candy thanks to free web hosting like YouTube and Google Video. I personally have a few suggestions for future student movies to come into reality. So listen up to these suggestions Michigan Tech directors!

Dance Dance Revolution: The Epic
This movie will feature the epic struggle of a kid who can only win his fights through Dance Dance Revolution (DDR) the videogame. It will involve his struggle to find social acceptance, cultural acceptance, and physical acceptance. The premise will involve the main star being an obese American child who, thanks to discovering DDR, will be able to lose weight, join the dance team, and eventually find who he really is. Video games have never been so powerful, definitely a tear-wrencher.

The Assignment: The Horror Film
All high school and college students fear what they do not understand, what follows them home every week, what just won't go away no matter how hard they try. That evil thing is none other than HOMEWORK!! Muahahaha! (Cue crackling thunder noises!) Thus the director can merely make a horror movie involving a homework assignment given so large, so immense, that the students are consumed one-by-one by this evil horror, which seemingly cannot be stopped. Forget "The Grudge" or the "The Ring", "The Assignment" is what will really scare chillin's!

Romeo and Computerette: Romance film

Basically another remake of William Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet," but modernized between a young teenager and their computer. The teenager grows up with his computer from an early age, discovers that it brings him true love and happiness, and ends up wedding it for better or worse. Computers age you know. How long will the marriage last? Will the passion be awkward? All this and more would be featured in this potential blockbuster hit.

Rocking Out: Adventure/Thriller Film
Rocks are probably the most abundant minerals in this 'Copper County', making this one particularly low budget. This movie would show intense footage of rock climbers venturing any of the mountains on the landscape and of course falling off as their journey gets more difficult. Low supplies and cannibalism are optional. Best results would be to film

Dave's Corner: Decode the Message

To tide you over in class, I have taken a message and, being the math major I am, encrypted it. Try and figure out what the message is.

...Blockbuster from front

Now that the ideas are out there, all one needs are bored people, a camera, and some passion. Yes, that kind. ☹

...Selection from front

I was only buying a box of 48-30mg caplets, not a freaking case. Then after that fun I asked if I needed to pose for a mug shot. So then I go to take the box and leave, but I have to pay for it then and there, WTF?

So what I have determined is that lawmakers can't do math. The same drug as I purchased can be bought in a 10mg boxes without all this hassle, stay with me here, which is just a third the strength, so if I were to produce meth I would simply buy three times the amount of the weaker.

So why the hell does Thee Walmart need to card you for everything you buy? I swear every time I go there to buy anything I have to have some dee-dee-dee come check my ID. Apparently if you are underage and you are sick, you're SOL.

Why make these things harder to get? If anything it should be getting easier. When you're old enough to take care of yourself, you should be able to buy anything. This way people that use/make the drugs will probably overdose and not be a problem anymore, curtailing those drug problems. This is natural selection, if you're too stupid to not do things that will kill you, you will not survive. This concept has been proven over and over again by people that step in front of large, moving objects. Now if the government would stop with this seatbelt enforcement ticketing.... ☹

Bull vs. Bull Invisibility or X-Ray Vision

X-Ray Vision ~ Joel Fox

Super powers are a sort of hypothetical situation that everyone can enjoy conversing about, especially with the ease at which they are attained (usually exposure to some sort of normally cancer-causing reagent) and the range of the various super powers out there (from super strength to converting robots into tricycles). Some super powers are by definition mutually exclusive, except in certain rare circumstances; super speed and density increase, shapeshifting and conjuration, and, of course, invisibility and x-ray vision.

The dichotomy of invisibility vs. x-ray vision is a tricky one; either you can be invisible, or see those that are invisible. The pros and cons of each are quite numerous, and in some ways it would be great to have both as they work in synergy, but the tricky thing about this bifurcation is that many of the abilities accompanying each invisibility and x-ray vision overlap; as in, to a point they serve the same function.

In the realm of perversion, invisibility allows you to peep like no Tom before you, while x-ray vision lets you peep at anyone, any time. In infiltration, invisibility allows you to circumnavigate many security installations, while x-ray vision allows you to perceive all security measures (not just readily visible ones, so you can discern RFID scanner waves, security lasers, etc.). In combat the enemy cannot see you (but can still smell you, hear you, feel you, etc.) if you're invisible, but if you have x-ray vision you can detect any flaws or weaknesses in the enemy's defenses, their back-up forces, their hidden arsenals, etc.

The basic difference between the two is that invisibility has a much smaller scope than x-ray vision, but invisibility is much more effective in this limited scope. Personally, in a world inhabited Invisibility would be an amazing super power for a college student to have; in fact I say it would be the best. Just think about it for a moment; what would you do with invisibility? I know that there are several things that I would instantly have to do just because I could. The really great thing about being invisible is that you can still touch crap and nothing will see you touch it unless they have thermal vision. Okay, so now on to what you could be doing while invisible.

with such super beings as myself—with powers far greater than mine, and in much greater number and breadth—I would definitely go with x-ray vision, as it keeps me informed and makes me more adept at dealing with a wide span of super-problems. ☹

Invisibility ~ Nick Leatherman

You would definitely have to screw with people that you don't like. You could trip them, poke at them, and make their beds shake while they are sleeping. The possibilities are endless. I mean we all saw Harry Potter and remember when he randomly threw snowballs while invisible; perfect idea!

We all know we have to mess with the opposite sex a bit as well.... So, locker room anyone? Sit in the room while they are changing and take a picture, I mean, all they would see is a camera floating away that just magically took their picture. Okay, so maybe that is a bad idea, but you could definitely get some nice random groping in.

After you are satisfied with that/take a break from it, you can go and cause some havoc. Make things float, then have a friend come in and act like he is getting rid of some ghosts for a measly $500. That could be some good business, in fact the Brothers Grimm did it, and as Jacob says, "There is quite a bit of money to make."

If you would prefer to live a life in a more adventurous manner, I am sure some government would love a spy that can turn invisible.

Personally, I would just have fun being naked everywhere because you know the invisibility doesn't make your clothes invisible. ☹
