Iraqi Kitten Death Toll Tops 9,000

By Nathan Miller ~ Daily Bull

Four more kittens died today in the latest string of deadly bombings to strike the somewhat peaceful city of Fallujah. This brings the total number of kittens killed since the Iraq war began to 9,002. Many hope the escalating violence will wane so as to avoid the deaths of more innocent kittens in Iraq.

The recent car bombings in Fallujah have brought the current number of kittens killed to 9,002, which according to the Kitten Ambassador to the United Nations, is one of the highest feline death tolls for any war. When asked whether or not the Pussies of the world would seek international reparations

Things to Do in Madison during Halloween Weekend

By David Klemens ~ Daily Bull

Halloween weekend in Madison, Wisconsin is one of the biggest gatherings in the country. I felt as an investigative reporter for the Daily Bull that it was my responsibility, nay my privilege to trek to Madison and recount my trip.

The drive sucked. I was picking up me good friend, Aleks, in Stevens Point, WI. I didn't think it would be that bad; it was that bad. The ride was so boring. There was nothing interesting to look at while driving. The most interesting things I saw were a stuffed moose head that was for sale, Paul Bunyan and a couple go-kart tracks. I picked Aleks up and we drove the rest of the way to Madison.

Got to Madison swimmingly. Then came our mission to find a parking spot. We found a spot like a mile away from my friends' house. We lugged our stuff to her house and arrived to a house full of fun. Aleks and I got dressed. Aleks was business

Elmo (5 yr old Elmo costume and a business suit). I, being the politically correct person I am, went as Steve Irwin complete with bloodstain and stingray (with tail protruding from my back).

Let the fun begin:

Go to State St. There may be parties at pretty much every house you walk by, but the main event is on State St. That's where everyone goes to hang out and show off his or her costume. Watch out for the girls sprinting up and down the sidewalks...and definitely watch out for the scantily clad ladies. Beware, (in a good and bad way) wearing things that may act as a leash can (and often) turn into one. I'm not complaining though; very attractive girls can drag me around by my tie anytime.

Party hardy. Halloween only comes once a year, so enjoy it. Note: if you are of age you should provide for yourself; if you don't it is more than likely that you will be drinking PBR, tequila, moonshine, or all three. Shameless Disclaimer Be responsible and if you aren't of age don't drink (that's what Canada is for).

Have sex with a duck. This one isn't as easy as you'd think. I'm not going into this because it is something that every man should have to figure out for himself. That and I don't want to talk about that.

Get peed on. Also don't want to talk about that.

Try to find your way home. This one is a bit harder than walking around. By this part of the night you probably aren't doing so hot.

It helps to know the person whose house you are staying at and/or know his or her phone number; Aleks found that one out the hard way. On another note, if you are someone's only contact, make sure to bring a cell phone charger, so your friend doesn't end up sleeping in someone's yard.

Sleep in someone's yard. Yup, that's how we roll. Even if you don't realize you are sleeping in front of the house you are staying at, it is best to play it safe and sleep in someone's lawn chair. What could happen if you walking into some random person's house? Get bombarded with garbage, meet some nice ladies, lose your stingray in a poker game, just to name a few.

Madison is a good time to be had by all, even if you lose your cardboard stingray, contract avian flu and wake up to a dog licking your ear. G'day, mate. 🐾 against the needless slaughter of kittens around the world, the ambassador had responded with: "Mew mew. Meow mraow mew. Hisssssssss! MRAAAAOOW!! Mew Meow."

Though it isn't a very publicized issue, hundreds of innocent kittens are killed every month in Iraq, mostly from shrapnel or burns sustained from car bomb scratching posts, litter box mines, explosives-rigged catnip bottles, and American heat-seeking puppies. Humanitarian organizations such as the Red Cross are at a loss when trying to stop these adorable kittens from rubbing up against their favorite scratching post only for it to detonate and kill the kitten instantly.

"Out of all the wars and disasters I've been through, I've never seen anything more saddening than a kitten dying from cyanide poisoning after eating a booby trapped mouse," says humanitarian worker Francis McShane. "With most people, you can warn them about staying away from crowded areas that are targets for suicide bombers or mortar attacks, but kittens... they'll chase butterflies and rub up against anyone, even if they are strapped full of dynamite."

Recently American and Iraqi Coalition troops have been drilled on "safer" battle techniques when kittens are involved. Kitten safety is a major concern for both factions in the Iraq war. Waofi ib-Kal-Amarri, a member of Al-Qaeda in Iraq, explains.

"We used to shoot kittens for target practice and for fun to see who could bag the most, but now all of our children have no kittens left to eat when they are hungry, so we have to stop killing them. Kittens are our friends. We should all agree that murdering kittens gets us nowhere and should focus instead on blowing up innocent people instead."

Polls show that support for President Bush have dropped 3 percentage points in response to the increasing kitten deaths. Bush urged his fellow Americans that we all have to make some sacrifices to win the war, and that the dying kittens are doing their part by taking a ball bearing that would kill an American soldier or Iraqi civilian instead.

Kittens aren't the only small helpless animals to have higher than accepted numbers of casualties in Iraq. Ducks, little white mice, baby chimpanzees, and hedgehogs have seen increased rates of violent deaths. Hedgehogs in particular are more often being ripped open following a rumor that they are filled with gold rings. 🐾

news in brief by David Klemens

In Soviet Russia, Monkey Spanks You!

Monday the 30th, St. Petersburg, Russia, 15 monkeys escaped from their exhibits. Soon after there were several reports filed about monkey related assaults. The general trend is that a monkey sneaks up on a man, tripping him. The monkey then proceeds to beat the man for 5-10 minutes depending on how aroused the monkey is. It appears that size doesn't matter; both small and large monkeys seem to perform comparable. Interestingly enough, there have been other animal assault incidences such as a kitten that killed his 12-year-old owner, as well as chickens choking an 80-year-old man. 🐾
