Pop-Tarts or Fall!

By Simon Mused ~ Daily Bull

As most of you know, businesses love to advertise, and there's nowhere they love advertising more than smack in the middle of social chaos. No one knows about getting the most bang for your buck than the good folks at Kellogg's. They thoughtfully dumped 2.1 million Pop-Tarts into Afghanistan in 2001. At the time Afghanistan wasn't exactly in the best condition, but thanks to the Kellogg's that was a thing of the past. Just look how well off they are now!

This makes me think, why not do the same in Iraq? I mean, dump 4.2 million Pop-Tarts into the streets of Baghdad. Twice as much should fix the country twice as fast! It makes perfect sense; the correlation is obvious and therefore accepted by all.

But those few pricks who do

Nacho Chip Eating 1001

By Jake Appold ~ Daily Bull

Nachos are a very complicated food, although they are very tasty to eat. But, for one to fully enjoy his or her nachos, he or she must know the proper way to eat his or her nachos. I will go into detail on some basic and advanced techniques on how to properly eat, and therefore, thoroughly enjoying your next "Meal of the Gods".

Every good structure starts with a solid base. Be sure to get plenty of chips to accommodate your mass of topping. You don't want the Leaning Tower of Mexican Pisa. Also, all of the chips will come in handy for the eating part. Which brings me to Rule #1: Do not eat nachos with any eating utensils besides your god given moving digits. It doesn't really matter if the chips are spread out evenly; we'll get to that later.

Next comes the toppings, It doesn't really matter what kind of toppings you put on your nachos because this aspect is a little more personal. Feel free to be creative and let your inner feelings be expressed through the nacho medium. There is nothing like the natural high one gets from putting toppings on their nachos, whether you're a just cheese or a Supreme-O kinda person, this is a fairly broad spectrum. But nonetheless, Rule

#2: Get enough toppings to sufficiently use every nacho, and then get some more. This may be difficult to judge at times and may require some practice. Think of it this way, if the nachos were ugly people and the toppings were paper bags, you would want more then enough paper bags to cover the ugliness and some people are uglier so they need more than one bag to block the ugly. Every nacho should get its quota of topping, but every once in a while it's good to have an extra special nacho. Remember: It is better to have leftover toppings at the finish then it is to have leftover chips.

The best part...eating it. You may be all excited about your nachos, and you just want to dig in to it face first right when you sit down, but when you look at it, you could be puzzled and you may ask yourself "Well Jake, I got a lot of chips, and then I got even more toppings, so now I can't even get to the chips, and the chips I can get to don't even have any topping on them!" Just remember Rule #3: Utilize the Tool Chip. I was astonished to find out last week that one of my hallmates did not know what the Tool Chip was. What I am about to reveal to you has been past down from generation to generation in my family. The Tool Chip is the bitch chip that one uses to scoop topping onto a naked chip. To utilize this technique look for a chip that has no topping and maybe was at the bottom of the bag and was dwarfed by the other chips by an approximate a ratio of 1:2. If a Tool Chip is inaccessible, it is only proper to sacrifice a preexisting whole naked chip and fashion it to the appropriate size, yet another sacrifice is only crucial if naked chips still remain in the pile. The Tool Chip is generally the last chip eaten, unless, of course, it is broken to a size that renders it useless as a Tool Chip. When the Tool Chip is used in its proper fashion, it uncovers the chips beneath the topping, therefore letting you continue your journey to mastication erotica.

Upon approaching the end of your meal, it may become easier to judge how much topping to put on each chip, so that all the topping is used. Although, it is common to not finish all of the topping (assuming you followed rules 1 and 2) you may have feelings of guilt that some nachos weren't filled to full capacity. These feelings are quite common and one should not feel discouraged.

Lastly, after finishing your nachos, a delectable treat, one should be ready at all times to make emergency stops to the poop-shoot. From the moment you finish those bad boys, you are vulnerable to an attack. One should allow 24 hours of recovery time before lowering DefCon levels. Attacks may be long-winded or short and sweet. No matter how extreme these attacks can be one should always remember that your body is making those noises because you ate nachos. Think of all those underprivileged kids in other countries whose bodies never make those noises, the noises that only nachos can make. ☹ challenge this yet-to-be-unproven logic still insist on asking, "Isn't there anything better we can dump on them? What would they do with all those Pop-Tarts, anyway?" The answer to the first question would be NO. The answer to the second would be the tag question "What COULDN'T they make?"

Four of the most common ingredients in Pop-Tarts are corn syrup, high fructose corn syrup, dextrose, and sugar. These COMPLETELY different ingredients would have an immediate hold on the children's psyche. The resulting hyperactivity would induce such severe cases of ADD that they couldn't possibly focus on the war around them. "We will sever their gasp balloons!"

Fruit! Balloons! Why, it sounds like paradise already! Not quite, there is still one more issue that only the magic of Pop-Tarts can solve – unity. That's right, unity. Try saying, "I'll cut your throat" with molten chocolate fresh from the toaster (or personal flamethrower for those so inclined) sticking to your mouth. Try appearing threatening to your enemies with a pretty pink pastry in your hands. That is for the good of the whole community. No, its better than good, it's CRAZY GOOD!

Ask Katie Sheets

By Katie Sheets ~ Daily Bull

Dear Katie Sheets,
I really like this girl, but I'm not sure if she even notices me. How can I get her to like me back?

Sincerely,
Desperate

Dear Desperate,
Oh man, have I had some pretty bad experiences with secret crushes. For instance, a few years ago this guy randomly decided that he was going to kidnap me to prove his love for me

(not so romantic). After spending a week gagged and tied up in his basement with only crackers and Kool-Aid to drink, his mother finally found me when she came downstairs to do his laundry. She let me go, but only after trying to convince me her son was "...really a very magnificent boy." It turned out he'd had a problem with keeping a girlfriend for more than a day. I couldn't possibly imagine why. Thankfully, he was arrested later that week for stalking another girl.

Love,
Katie Sheets

Dear Katie Sheets,
When I went to eat my breakfast this morning I found that my roommate had eaten all of my cereal. What Running low on mortar to fix up those broken buildings that are randomly appearing out of thin air? Pop-Tarts could be mixed with those remaining and still be just as sticky, plus your home will smell like strawberries! You will be the envy of your neighbors...or their targets.

This article is not paid for by Kellogg's, but it might as well be. Tell your friends to send Pop-Tarts to Iraq IMMEDIATELY, and show them this article if you can't convince them (although not this copy in particular, for it is obviously ruined). Happy Humanitarianism! ☹
