Ask KatieSheets

By Katie Sheets ~ Daily Bull

Dear KatieSheets,
Why is the rum always gone?

Sincerely,
Thirsty

Dear Thirsty,
Rum makes me mad! I was recently in a relationship with the flakiest guy ever and he LOVED the rum. He seemed like an amazing guy at first, but after a while he started bringing home these scallywag so-called-friends and all they did was drink rum and yell all night about how they "longed for the sea" (whatever that meant). He also really liked to cheat on me. He said it was because he was a "free spirit" but frankly I wasn't buying it. I had decided to put up with it for a while, only because he was very nice on the eyes, when he suddenly disappeared without any kind of warning.

Man Jaded by Eighth Alien Abduction

By Nathan "Invincible" Miller ~ Daily Bull

Aliens have abducted Brent Guimont, of Wichita, Kansas, for the eighth time, local authorities report after rescuing him from the top of an abandoned silo Sunday.

"Yeah, he was just chilling up there like nothing had happened," said Wichita sheriff Adam DiPietro. "Guess he's used to this sort of thing happening, seeing as how this is his eighth time since moving here five years ago."

After climbing down a stack of hay bales, curious onlookers patted him down to see if he had brought back any alien devices, or had grown a new appendage.

"One time, he smuggled out a laser rifle under his jacket, that lucky fool. He sold that for ten chickens and 30 lbs. of fresh bacon. Course, then old Jenkins dropped it down the well, so now we're always on the lookout for shiny things he's stolen," claims one jealous towns person.

Scientists are baffled at how one man could be abducted so many times in such a short span of time. Guimont is just like many other people in his area. He gets up in the morning, drives to the popcorn kernel factory where he, along with 500 of his closest friends and relatives pluck every kernel off the cob, by hand. After work, he drives home to enjoy the company of his wife and watch television before heading to bed.

"It's not fair!" complains longtime friend Andrew Boettcher. "Share the wealth, I say! I think it's about time some of the rest of us got experimented on. Why's he gotta go and hog it all? Cheap bugger."

While most people can only dream of being whisked away by extra-terrestrials, Brent says he has become jaded from his multiple experiences with the otherworldly monsters.

"See, the first time I was all scared, you know? I mean, who wouldn't be scared their first time. At least I used protection," Brent explains while showing off his ineffective tin foil helmet. "The second and third time, I was thinking I must be one lucky guy. Then after that, I started wondering why they kept taking me when there were plenty of other people that hadn't been traumatized yet."

"The seventh time, I was on my way back from picking up some cold ones from the store when they snatched me again. When I was waiting to be strapped down on their table, I could hear some of them arguing, heard some laser shots, then they came and used telekinesis to tell me that there had been a mistake, and I was being beamed back down. They seemed really sorry."

"They even offered me a free first class ticket for the inconvenience, but I didn't really have any plans to visit Aiur," he added.

The media was quick to try and disprove Brent's story, yet their pathetic attempts at undermining his world-wide fame failed when security tape footage at his local bank caught him being lifted away in a beam of light.

"Shoddy special effects, that's all," claimed one media analyst. "Anyone could have done that in MS Paint in five minutes – beginner stuff."

On top of being abducted eight times, Brent has been lost at sea four times, survived falling out of an airplane at 35,000 feet, accidentally eaten three sticks of lit dynamite, and walked away with minor injuries after having been crushed by a piano, 16 ton weight, an elephant, four safes, and the entire cast of Baywatch (10 lbs). 🐼

I was so depressed I decided to drink my sorrows away, but, alas, he had consumed all of the rum before leaving me to wallow.
