If I Did It: How to Destroy Campus

By Nathan "Invincible" Miller
~ Daily Bull ~

Now this is a story all about how my life got turned upside down and I'd like to take a minute. Just sit right there and I'll tell you how I imagined the collapse of McNair, and the rest of campus.

Note: this is an accurate description of how I would realistically demolish all of MTU. I haven't actually done any of these crimes, but if I were to go on a spree of destruction, I'd probably do it something like this. Remember though, if the glove doesn't fit, you must acquit.

Ok, so I had a bad day. I probably failed an exam, stubbed my toe, poked myself in the eye, had explosive diarrhea, had my ego destroyed, and a hundred other little things that all add

Safety 3rd

By Nathan "Invincible" Miller ~ Daily Bull

So I was sitting here thinking of Bull ideas (and failing) when I looked up and saw my Safety 3rd poster I made. This inspired me to write about all the best situations I can think of where safety comes third. But first, a quick introduction into my new ethos.

The idea for Safety 3rd came from people like myself who were tired of having safety considerations ruin all the fun. An example: "Hey lets do [dangerous action] with the [dangerous item] while we do the [dangerous action] in the [dangerous setting]." Then someone comes out of nowhere and says, "That's not such a good idea guys." The fun would then be ruined, because if you're right in the head you'll realize it probably isn't the smartest thing you've ever done.

However, following the guidelines of the Safety 3rd ethos, fun always comes first. The second consideration is how to have said fun, and the third consideration should be safety. This means the next time someone says to you, "I don't think that's such a good idea," you can reply, "Safety 3rd dude!" and commence whatever awesome thing you were about to accomplish. Here's my list that I came up with:

- Having sex on a spire in the middle of the Grand Canyon. As you're about to do the deed, you realize you have no condom. Shit looks like you're going to have to climb out of the canyon, walk for 100 miles to the nearest gas station, buy a condom, and return to the spire, where your partner has undoubtedly jumped to their death from boredom.

- Conversely, you could have called a Safety 3rd and done it anyway, saving you all that hassle. The same goes for being stranded on a deserted island.

- All forms of playing with fire, including, but not limited to, catching yourself on fire, jumping over fire, jumping onto fire, falling onto fire, driving through fire, shooting fire, playing with Molotov cocktails or gasoline filled water balloons, having a snowball fight with gas soaked snowballs that are also on fire, or a host of other things you can do with fire that I haven't thought of yet, otherwise I'd have done them already.

- Playing with Tazers. Don't Taze me bro, don't taze me! Enough said.

- Walking across US-41. Everyone knows that there are safer ways (jet-packs, steam tunnels, catapults, etc), yet we continue to march across it en masse. Why do we run like lemmings towards our doom? Because we go the way of Safety 3rd. Haven't we all had the urge to run into the road to achieve the sheer adrenaline rush that is a logging truck bearing down on you at 50 mph that has no brakes and is about to hit a patch of ice? I know I sometimes do.

- Eating crayons. We all did it when we were kids, just to see what it was like.

- Petting dangerous looking animals. But they're so cute they couldn't hurt a fly... OH SHI- HE'S EATING MY ARM OH MY GOD SOMEONE HELP AAARGGH ah ok that was crazy. Game face.

- Putting your head in a waffle iron. I wanna try this sometime. It sounds fun.

- Playing broomball. There has to be some insanity involved.

- Digging a tunnel to China. Eventually you're going to reach the core of the Earth and you'll burn up. Safety comes third though, so you'll deal with the searing temperatures when you get there, probably by making a tin foil reflector shield.

So there you go Jimmy Jimmy. Next time you are being held back by safety considerations, put it on the back burner. Safety is not important as long as you can have more fun without it. Now where's my flame-thrower... ☹ up to one thing: smash!

To start off, I'd somehow manage to "acquire" a semi-truck filled with the most potent non-nuclear explosives available. I'd probably buy one of these at a yard sale, like I do with most of the other things I've come to own (You can find anything at yard sales).

Said semi would then careen up McNair hill via remote control, squashing many an ignorant student. With enough force, I'd break on through to the other side and wind up in the courtyard where it would detonate, sending hunks of west McNair flying in all directions.

Some of these pieces would inevitably fly straight towards east McNair, knocking it off balance and down onto US-41. Here enough logging trucks would pile up that they would eventually cause a chain reaction of explosions, eventually leading to the Rozsa, catching it on fire with spectacular results.

Meanwhile while all this was happening, I'd begin the mortar attack on the other end of campus. The MUB, library, and the Admin buildings would be first to go. I'd be shooting them off from Ripley, so I'd be safe from whatever firepower MTU has hidden on campus.

Then I'd bring out the big guns: Tomahawk missiles I picked up off eBay. These would of course be aimed directly at the MEEM, hitting it for massive damage. And then, just how everyone has imagined, it would collapse onto Chem-Sci, which would in turn crumble into the EERC. Chem-Sci would naturally leak paralyzing nerve gas and other chemical weapons, since all chemical buildings are filled with dangerous stuff like that.

Once most of the initial resistance had been wiped out, I'd drive in like Patton in a tank I found in a junkyard somewhere. Details are sketchy, but it has Soviet symbols all over it, so who ever owned it was probably a communist. I grabbed it for $5, and it still runs buildings over fine. Especially Fisher and Dillman.

I wouldn't even have to go near DHH, seeing as how it'd probably fall down from all the ground shaking from everything else being demolished. Wads would be a problem though since it's so big. But I figured out a way: the steam pipes.

I'd grab a tanker conveniently loaded up with acetylene, emptying the entire thing into the pipes in Wads. Practically immediately it'd blow up the entire building in one salvo. Victory is mine.

The results of this run would be more than satisfying. Unfortunately this amazing dream will never be realized, as I don't know where to find semis filled with explosives or acetylene, and the fact if I did this I'd have to hide in Africa somewhere for the rest of my life; which I don't really want to do, because there are lions there and I'd have to stay in my car. ☹
