The Writers Strike Back

By Nathan "Invincible" Miller ~ Daily Bull

In case you hadn't heard, the Writers Guild of America has been striking for around 11 weeks now. "Who are these writers and why are they striking, Nathan?" you may be asking. Very good question my adoring little fan.

The Writers Guild of America (WGA) is a very creative gathering of people just like me and the rest of the Daily Bull staff. They write most TV shows and a whole ton of other things for our amusement. Without great people like us, you would probably still be banging bricks against your head for fun.

"But Nathan, you still haven't answered why they're striking! I wanna know! Waaaa" DAMNIT LET ME MAKE SOME JOKES SO THIS ISN'T A FRICKEN LECTURE DAMNIT (NOW YOU'RE JUST MAKING A SCENE).

Yeah, that's right, I'm the boss. Cause I'm the writer; I lay down the rules. See, the way things used to work was writers would get a percentage of each movie sale and a bunch of other complicated matters that I am omitting to make this simpler. Anyway, now they aren't making as much cash and they wanted more, but all the rich big bosses over at HQ are like, "No way guys, our money.

Go cry." And for a while the writers did cry. They were very sad and little homeless children comforted them, saying, "Aww poor writers, isn't there something revengeful you can do to the big bosses to take away from their profits 'til they give you your money you so justly deserve?"

This got those clever writers thinking. They were so used to writing terrible plots just like their own lives that what they did next came naturally for them: they struck. Joined the Picket. Showed who's boss. Went. On. Strike.

"Oh Lawd! How could they do that, Nathan? Don't they care that I'm missing all my favorite new television shows!? Now I wanna cry and go on strike!" Don't worry my fine friend, it's not as bad as you think, unless of course you actually enjoyed watching bad TV. Many of our late night comedy stars have returned, albeit somewhat crippled in some cases, but returned nonetheless. Isn't that better than nothing?

True, you may be missing a lot of next season's shows when they're sched-

Bull-Forced Movie "Suggestions": Dan in Real Life

By Simon Mused ~ Daily Bull

You may be going out to watch the movie "Dan in Real Life" tomorrow in the Fisher building. For that I congratulate you on planning to watch this excellent film. Let the Daily Bull provide you with an exquisite review as to our thoughts of "Dan" and his "Real Life".

The movie sucked epically. For a comedy film, it was quite depressing. Homer will write tales of his movie for ages to morn and High School students to complain as he turns in his grave. Nothing would make me more sickened then the thought of sitting in that theater watching as Steve Carell beats his career to death uled to run, but in the grand scope of things, are you really missing anything? I think that this strike the writers have going here is not simply a plan to get more money, but a way to save America.

Yes, I believe the Writers Strike is a good thing. One, it gets people off the couch, out into the cold, and then back to the hospital with hypothermia because they forgot to put on warm clothes. Two, hopefully it'll get rid of a good chunk of the awful shows plaguing or television sets (or conversely, it will only spawn more reality TV, which don't require writers at all. Oh the humanity!).

And three, if you don't have any new episodes to watch on the TV, maybe you'll be more likely to pick up a Daily Bull, glance at the writer, think, "Gosh, Nathan 'Invincible' Miller is a fantastic guy and I'd love to meet him and shake his hand for a job well done," and then continue to read his/my awe-inspiring articles.

I can see it now, the lines of loving fans will be streaming down the halls of McNair like money into the writers' pockets once their demands are met and the big bosses finally fork over their fair share. I can hardly wait.

In the meantime though, root for the little guys. Imagine yourself somewhere down the road in a union, working in a sweatshop since you failed at life. This is exactly how the writers feel. All they want is a better life. Don't give em hassle, give em support. It's the least we can do.

with a rusty stove pipe. I must say I had to go home and watch "two girls one cup" just to be rid of those disgusting images. Keep in mind most of us have not actually seen the movie, but we would rather watch autistic kittens have muscle spasms - same thing.

Of course the movie did have its surprises. The scene at the dinner table where Dan (Steve Carell) stabs his brother Mitch (Dane Cook) in the chest with a fork at the very end of the movie made me jump right out of my seat! Seeing the little girl's face when their uncle got shanked was priceless! Don't worry though; Mitch survives, Dan gets the girl, and the children recover just fine.

On a side note, the Internet Movie Database claims that on the scene that contains a close up to Dane Cook's face, one can see Steve Carell masturbating furiously in the reflection of Dane's eyes.

I give "Dan in Real Life" a  $(4((5/\cos(\pi)^2))/20)$  out of 5.

A Guide to Getting That Puppy in the Window

By Nick Nelson ~ Daily Bull

Everyone loves dogs (except for people that hate dogs and kitten-huffing addicts). Dogs are the ruling species on Earth, a fact ignored by most people. If you don't believe me, then why are there laws in place that tell you to pick your dog's crap up off the street or grass? Why do you (or, more likely, your parents) work day in and day out to pay for your dog's health care and food while it stays at home mutilating your belongings through various fanged appendages and excremental orifices? It's obvious truth that dogs are our commanders. Since you undoubtedly crave a dog in your life by now (if you don't already have one), there are some facts you may want to know before you purchase that cute puppy in the window.

If not for kibble, snausages, and beggin' strips, dogs would instantly eat all of our faces. But dogs are at least 10 times smarter than Stephen Hawking and know that killing humans would mean an end to these obscenely overprocessed yet delicious meat-flavored snacks. As long as humans keep making this type of dog currency, we will continue to find a use for the dog, including: maintaining world population by murdering children in their sleep, maintaining cat population (which also effectively lowers kitten-huffing-related accidents, according to government surveys), personal enjoyment for fecalphiliacs and water sports hobbyists, spreading rabies, penis size compensation, keeping the police carpet cleaning businesses in existence, taking all the fun out of blind people, and homework procrastination excuses. Dogs are also occasionally used in bestiality porn, an unsettling but prominent part of the pornography industry (the coolest industry ever, according to 3 out of 4 Michigan Tech students).

If you've ever taken a science class at Tech with a lab component, then you should be familiar with some of the warning symbols used to caution potential slaves (I mean buyers) about their purchase's dangers. The following are some common symbol labels:

- Flammable: dogs with low boiling points
- Oxidizing: dogs that react exothermically with other substances
- Explosive: dogs that explode
- Toxic: dogs that can cause health complications
- Corrosive: dogs that destroy living tissue on contact
- Hazardous to the Environment: dogs that present some danger to the environment (especially trees and fish) sideration the species of dog you would like to have around. This may include, but is not limited to:

- Poodles: dog counterpart to the bi-curious metrosexual
- Huskies: interesting and intelligent, but typically unattractive
- Sheep Dog: can entertain itself by trying to herd itself for infinity
- Pit Bull: the sweetest of all the dogs, but has an appetite for the gamey meat of human children
- Pomeranians: can live off pomegranates until turned into pom-poms
- Chihuahuas: a rare breed that can only be found peddling fake Mexican food to Americans or in Paris Hilton's handbags)
- Puppies (generic): huge amount of fun until they excrete waste all over your stuff; also good as various makeshift sports equipment

Hopefully you have a fair understanding of dogs by now. Go get one before we run out of treats and the human race ends!
