

DAILY FLYING

The Daily Bull is probably not suitable for those under age 18 and should not be taken seriously... like the last week of classes!

Spring... Fling?

By Nathan "Invincible" Miller

~ Daily Bull ~

Spring Fling huh? More like Mud Fling to me. You call this spring out? Cause I sure don't. Whoever came up with such a misleading name ought to be shot... or given a medal – I can't decide which. After all, the genius behind Spring Fling is, well, genius.

Now even though at least half the U.P. is wearing shorts, grilling, and maybe even mowing the lawn or trimming the hedges, it still doesn't mean it's officially spring. Spring is finally signified by the emergence of a beautiful creature most people like to call the "woman in bikini."

For most places in the country, this may not happen until May, or even June, as the weather has not significantly improved to

Stereotypical Falling Situation Happens on MEEM

By Nathan "Invincible" Miller ~ Daily Bull

With another finals week quickly approaching, authorities were alerted last Monday to another stereotypical falling incident at Michigan Tech's R. L. Smith Mechanical Engineering-Mechanics Building. The scene of many purportedly awesome, tragic, or absurd falling occurrences since it was built, the MEEM has continuously been a problem for the institution.

"When the MEEM was built, it was lauded as being an engineering feat seen nowhere else in the U.P. and a proud expression of MTU's engineering prowess," explains James Naujokas, president of the Local Building Admirers club.

"Now things just keep falling off it. It's a shame that it's come to this."

Built during the hey-day of MTU's expansion days, the MEEM stands as the tallest building for hundreds of miles, consequently making it the prime place for things to tumble off of. Even with many other high places to drop things from, the MEEM is more often than not where the bulk of these incidents happen.

Example Trajectories Off the MEEM

"Refrigerators, Televisions, dead bodies, live bodies, bombs pennies and snowmen, you name it, people have threatened of the Local Building Admirers club.

...Going Down? from front or have tossed it off," says James. "Even baby deer and rabbits. It's preposterous to think that on the way down, these cute animals are going to grow wings and fly to safety. It just doesn't happen. Trust me, I know."

Monday's item fit into the broad category of things you could fit inside the elevators that quickly shuttle the object to its inevitable doom. While some things are too big to be taken up in one go, it has been rumored that certain Enterprises on campus have disassembled and built cars, biplanes, and even a modular home atop the structure, sending them on their way over the precipice in stunning fashion.

Campus cops are powerless to stop the carnage, as anyone with swipe access to the MEEM and the desire to destroy can and will figure out a way to dump something off the "brick dick." Whether it be as innocent as an egg or water balloon to something as serious as an impact-triggered nuclear device, someone has thought of what would happen if it were to be chucked off. President Naujokas elaborates.

"Back in the early days of the MEEM, when the possibilities were still endless as to what could be thrown off, they held a 'Fling your Fantasy' event during Spring Fling, where you could lob whatever you'd like, from bad boyfriends to watermelons to your roommate's dirty laundry. Those days have long since passed, being forced underground like some sort of meth lab or similar illicit activity. We're just out for a little fun, that's all. Never meant to hurt anyone we didn't mean to hurt."

"Although we did try to hit pedestrians on a few occasions," he adds while making a pitching motion. "Nothing serious though, just a couple of bumps on the head and trips to the hospital."

Despite welding shut all doors to the roof and erecting a steel cage enclosing the entire top of the building, people will still manage to fulfill their fantasy of letting something go into infinity and beyond.

"It's in people's primal nature to cause mayhem through aerial bombardment," claims James. "Preventing these thoughts takes away the very meaning for which it is to be human." 🌱

...Bikini Battle! from front justify celebrating the occasion with a bountiful amount of exposed skin. Yet in the U.P., practically any and head outside where they could be admired by hundreds of awaiting virgin eyes.

What they thought of could be called pure brilliance – Spring Fling. They'd dig up a field on campus, spray it down with water, mash it around, and voila! Oozeball was born. Of course, it helped greatly if you didn't have all that cumbersome clothing weighing you down, so... it was encouraged to take it off and enjoy the sticky goop in as revealing clothes as you could muster.

Total genius. Not only would all the guys get to feast their eyes upon the smooth, mud-caked skin of their female counterparts, spring would be sprung, along with many other things ahem. As an added bonus, sororities congregated from miles around to partake in an underground, after-hours mud wrestling league while the field was still fresh.

Now you know the truth of the matter, straight from the mouth of the source – me, Nathan "Invincible" Miller, the man with the golden eyes and fire-orange hair. If you happen to be walking around campus on Spring Fling, stop by the Daily Bull Booth by the Rosza sign for some sweet water balloon action. Guaranteed free water balloons if you're wearing a bikini, whether you be man, woman, or child. Be there! 🌱

By technicality, this is yet another Miller Time/Daily Miller/Invincible-bull, but I decided to let it slide this time. You can thank me for being so awesome. Kiss kiss.
