Oh Bloody Hell

By Nathan "Invincible" Miller
~Daily Bull~

MTU recently had their little blood drive war with NMU, which I'm assuming we won, cause we're awesome like that and deserve to win more than those Marquette snobs.

Now that I've expressed the truth about our fellow U.P. students, it's time for the nitty gritty. Everything you thought about donating blood, all those times you thought you were giving your blood to a good cause - all wrong.

That's right. Not only did you lose a pint of blood and stand in line for an ungodly amount of time this past Tuesday, but all that suffering and pain isn't even being put to good use. Well, not for what you thought at least.

Your blood, with all its po-

Origins of the Universe

By Simon Mused ~ Daily Bull

Take a break from creation and read this article. Your mind is always busy, so its time to take a rest. Ever wonder why you don't feel smart enough to handle something, or you're just not feeling smart altogether? That's because you're too busy creating the universe, or at least the universe within a 4 mile radius. Let me explain to you what you obviously already know (seeing as how you wrote this article).

The universe exists entirely within the confines of your own mind. Your real body is either in a vegetative state in a hospital or strapped to a straight jacket rocking back and forth. This body is really plugged into the matrix, were robots are using you for heat and electricity. This entity exists within the mind of M. Night Shyamalan in a sub universe where Chuck Norris is a wimp, the ratio has reversed, and Hot Pockets don't give you diarrhea (they still don't taste good, however, as no amount of spatial bending could fix that). This universe exists within the mind of an autistic child, whose attention to even the smallest details of these multiple universes has more than made up for poor grammar skills, who exists in a black void floating freely to create for all eternity.

Now back to your universe. Your cognitive processing is being used primarily to create your surrounding area and its inhabitants. Because your brain serves for other useful functions, such as speaking and focusing all rage toward Hot Pockets (come on, their slogan is the name of their product), you compensate by only creating everything within a 4 mile radius. Everything else that is occurring elsewhere is merely your brain trying to convince you that your universe is not that bad. "Hey look at it this way at least you are not in that blown up desert town."

This explains why you don't feel as smart as you should be. Your universe just requires a little more detail. Why are nerds so smart? Because their universe consists of books they mentally wrote and the World of Warcraft they created. The whole reason your even here is to think up laws and theories that create your universe and remember childhood forgotten yet constantly implemented rules of nature, like gravity!

All people you see but do not interact with are also mere randomly generated persons created to ease loneliness. Everyone you do interact with was ...Creationism = Fail from front specifically created and behaves in ways only your subconscious could possibly understand. Your friends were created because you need companionship. Enemies were created to give you something to talk about, along with giving yourself a challenge. Everyone's background story is self-created entertainment, some of which seems very elaborate yet is completely random.

In this sense you wrote this bull article partially because you want to entertain yourself, yet at the same time are seeking answers to the universe and don't feel like going to any religious institution. That's OK, but just remember that you came up with of those religions. World strife is your fault, but it's OK because none of it is really happening.

...Sanguine Sugar from front tentially life-saving properties, is being turned into dangerous weaponry, robots, and other potentially lethal technologies by none other than your friends down at your local hospital.

A long, long time ago, even before Don McLean wrote American Pie, the government discovered and backwards-engineered alien technology (like they always do, those cheaters). But this wasn't just your ordinary laser guns, quantum computers, and ICBM technology that they usually find. Remember all those people who got abducted by aliens?

All of the sudden I just realized what was going on, and doing a little bit more research, I came to the conclusion that I had inadvertently started describing the plot to War of the Worlds! Aghast, I thought to myself, "Oh bloody hell, there goes a perfectly good Daily Bull article."

Distraught over the near loss of such a fine idea, I recalibrated where I was going and decided just to talk about blood some more. Just as soon as I stop narrating how I write bull articles.

Oh bloody hell this is annoying. But probably not as annoying standing in line and wasting your valuable time to donate blood, if you did. I thought about donating, but when I went to hop in line, I noticed a little sign that read, "Wait Time for this ride: 1 hour." And all I'd get was a lousy sticker.

Plus I had a broomball game, and to me being able to play broomball and not faint or have a heart attack is more important than standing in line for hours to bleed all over the place. Hell, if they gave me a sterile bucket and a knife, I'd give them 2 pints of blood in a matter of seconds. Maybe even 5! Then they could pour it into the big tanker truck of blood they have at the hospital and ship it all over the country.

If everyone who wanted to donate blood had the chance, I'm sure we'd have beaten those freaks at NMU 500 times over. And we'd have saved practically a million lives, which is an added bonus to beating NMU. Cause this is a competition, and getting second place in a blood drive war means we'd have drained all our blood for nothing. And, without all that blood we're a lot weaker so we won't be able to go over there and physically crush them nearly as well.

Or conversely, we won't have the strength to fight them off when they invade for Winter Carnival. And speaking of Winter Carnival (and drinking), I think I just figured out why we give blood, and that is to increase our blood alcohol content. With less blood to water down the alcohol you drink, you'll get drunk faster, thus saving you money on beer. It all makes sense now. Good luck out there with this newfound knowledge. 🙄
