A Heroic Loss

By Nathan "Invincible" Miller
~ Daily Bull ~

My heroes! Where have you gone? It seemed like only yesterday I could look up to half a dozen or more amazing gentlemen and think, gosh, I wish I was as cool as they were. Of course, those days are clearly numbered: in the last 6 months alone, many of the most respected people on the face of the entire planet passed away.

What, you never heard? Maybe you've been playing games too long, or haven't heard my lamenting over your loud music. Just this past week, science fiction great Sir Arthur C. Clarke, renowned writer of 2001: A Space Odyssey and over 100 other books, died at the ripe old age of 90.25. Truly a sad day that will be remembered in the minds of everyone who wished they had a computer as bad ass as Hal 9000, or wanted a monolith of their very own

Ack a Tangent!

By Nathan "Invincible" Miller ~ Daily Bull

There I was, innocently taking a shower, by myself, when the first one hit me – a Daily Bull article idea! Of course – I'll write something about being epic. It'll be brilliant and awesome and everything I could ever imagine it would be. But what's this? Something else was coming into the shower with me. "Oh god, not again," I thought to myself. Fortunately it wasn't another dude... unfortunately, it was something far more sinister.

JESUS CHRIST I CAN SEE FOREVER

It was another idea! How could this be? That's right, I've got Writer's Diarrhea. I can come up with ideas on the fly just like that. But two in as little as five seconds? Ridiculous.

Typically what I'd do next was brainstorm great jokes and plotlines for the articles I come up with. Also just as typical is how I come up with even more articles while thinking of stuff to write about. Sometimes I end up writing two articles for the price of one, though in this case, I was in way over my head.

This wasn't just any firesale at the local mattress warehouse. This was a wild-fire of ideas, and it was roaring out of control. There were so many articles,

I decided, that it opened up a rift in space-time to the Tangential Dimension!!! At this point, I was extremely excited that not only had I opened up a portal to another dimension, I was going to be squeaky clean and sexy when I stepped through it.

Alas, my hopes were dashed when it turned out to be the same one I'd just came from. It wasn't another dimension, a new galaxy, or even intergalactic planetary. It was just the same old shower stall. Drats. And here I was hoping to win over some alien princesses when I dropped in on their dinner party wearing naught but my towel.

Bull vs. Bull: Writing Articles

Writer's Diarrhea

By ~ Nathan "Invincible" Miller

My loyal readers, I've something to admit: I've got Writer's Diarrhea. I've had this affliction for quite some time now, stemming all the way back to my early days with the Bull. This is why I'm the one writing all the Invinci-Bulls and Miller Times. But firstly, what is this strange disease?

Writer's Diarrhea typically develops in the lower intestinal track, and enables the infected individual the unique ability to pull whatever he wants out of his ass, whether it be jokes, stories, imaginary worlds, or explanations for things people didn't think existed, such as Writer's Diarrhea. Symptoms include spontaneous nature, a constant sense of humor, and unsurpassed potential for insane ideas.

Contrary to popular belief, not all types of diarrhea, including explosive, burning, and the good ol' fashioned runs, are bad. I for one benefit from my diarrhea. Not only am I able to purge my mind and body of hilarious thoughts, I do it in style, too. Can't really say the same for explosive diarrhea.

Without my Writer's Diarrhea, I'd probably perish. How could I write multiple Daily Bull articles a week for months on end if I couldn't come up with stuff on the fly? I'd have Writer's Block like the rest of the Daily Bull staff, who desperately rely on me to keep them afloat in their time

All this thinking about other dimensions got me wondering: I hope people weren't too scared by the word "tangential." Most of the time when I see anything with tangent in it, I cower in fear. Tangent graphs?! They're not even continuous! How could anyone like them?

They probably don't, and I'm sorry if I've brought anyone to tears with all this math talk. But wait, what's this... I've just brought up something completely irrelevant to the story... I've gone off on a tangent!! Tangents! Of course! Tangents don't have to be math! They can be when your professor starts talking about something irrelevant and wastes half of class! Perfect.

And with that, I've discovered five things on this fine night:
1. I can connect practically any two things through illogic and persuasion.

2. I can't stop thinking of Amazing and hilarious article ideas for the Daily Bull.
3. In the year 2525, if man is still alive, if woman can survive, they may find...
4. I can seduce alien princesses with cunning charm and unparalleled sarcasm.
5. Video Chatting has the potential to turn into a porn show. Use wisely.

If ever you have a million things on your mind, take my advice and keep things cool. The last thing anybody needs is all those dirty violent happy thoughts wasted.

to change time and space.

But that's only the beginning. Probably the last man for a great while to be considered a hero for the entire world, Sir Edmund Hillary passed on in January. What?! How could such an epic man die?! First climber of the tallest mountain on the planet, you'd think that would be enough to gain immortality in this world. Apparently not. What more do the gods want?

They didn't want blood and sacrifice; otherwise Evel Knievel would still be alive today. That's right, the first nearly invincible man died last November of a number of completely lame and boring illnesses that I will not mention here so as not to tarnish his grand reputation. I mean, who else is awesome enough to attack another dude with a baseball bat with both arms broken and in casts? Outrageous. This all American hero will never be forgotten.

And let's not forget Mr. Steve Irwin, dodger of death on more occasions than days I've been alive. Crikey! Lemme stick my arms inside this croc's mouth and see if I can pull out that deadly poisonous snake I fed it! It was a wonder how he managed to stay alive, until that fateful stingray barb got him. *tear*

Other less notable heroes who've died in the past year and a half or so include the inventor of the instant ramen noodle, Momofuku Ando; Paul Tibbets, pilot of the Enola Gay, the plane that dropped the first nuclear bomb on Nagasaki; and Gary Gygax, creator of Dungeons and Dragons and destroyer of millions of people's free time and pocketbooks.

Why are so many of the greatest people in the world dying so suddenly? It's extremely improbable that it's all a coincidence. I suspect something bigger is afoot... Like the Legion of Doom! Now that they've eliminated all those nefarious superheroes, they're forced to go after all our ordinary heroes instead! The nerve!

With so many extraordinary gentlemen being taken from us, I think it's high time somebody got around to creating some new legends around here. Nobody's going to want to hear stories about Obama or Spitzer or Tom Cruise. They're not cool at all.

That's where you come in. The world needs us to be heroes for those who were lost, and being lame just isn't cutting it anymore. Especially since Favre retired. The Keggernaut, Jesus Tom, myself, and a few others can't save everyone. Come on people, do something epic for a change.

of need. It's a shame it's so hard to transmit Writer's Diarrhea. I have yet to infect a single other person with this fantastic disease. If I were a zombie, I'd still be level 1 I'm that bad. And since I'm the only one with it, people are always coming to me to try and extract something out of my ass to write about. But I can't produce on the spot like that! All that pressure makes my sphincter tighten like no other.

Fortunately for me, all my friends with Writer's Block are perfectly fine with me being the only one with Writer's Diarrhea, so long as I keep writing entertaining material for the Daily Bull. Fine by me, more glory for myself. On Silver! Ya!

After many weeks of deliberation, the rest of the Daily Bull staff finally gave up on trying to write something funny. The end.
