South Korea: New Masters of the Comfort Food Universe

By Tim Kotula ~ Daily Bull

I know you have Internet access close by, since it's the only way you manage to survive your science lecture, so go ahead – I'll wait. And yet, it serves as just another sad reminder of how far the United States has fallen when it comes to engineering developments. Those eternallythin Easterners have beaten us at our own game again.

"But Tim, how could this travesty possibly have been allowed occur?!" you ask. Indeed, I've spent many long, sleepless nights wondering this myself. I mean c'mon, we are THE nation of muffin tops and beer guts! The tubby citizens of this great country invented the stuffed crust pizza long before those short, Korean brainiacs got their hands on it. The Wisconsinites should've thought of this twist ages ago and even they never saw it coming (the good-for-nothing morons)! Why did this happen?!?!?!?!?

This girl knows when she's got a good wiener.

Well? Are you outraged yet?!?!? I know a large percentage of you are fluent in Korean, thanks to WoW and Halo 3, but for those of you who aren't, it basically advertises a new kind of stuffed crust pizza – with hot dogs!

People, this is brilliant! Talk about the next major breakthrough in stuffed crust pizza technology. Personally, I'm picturing a nice brat or kielbasa instead of that hot dog, maybe some yellow mustard on the side for dunking – yum! It's the perfect, epic heart attack in a slice. Order a large and you could easily get three meals out of that baby, probably

Armed Child Mistakenly Killed by Cops

By Nathan "Invincible" Miller

~ Daily Bull ~

The small town of Acton, TX was in an uproar this past Thursday when 6-year-old Colin Dalstra was shot and killed by vigilante cop Sgt. Drew Radford at a routine traffic stop. While it appeared Radford murdered young Colin in cold blood, the dashboard camera mounted in his police cruiser proved otherwise.

"The bloody little brute pulled a gun on me, you saw it," claims Radford. "As I was walking up to the car to discuss matters with his mother, Colin rolled down the back window, which I might add was tinted so I couldn't see the threat earlier. At this point I saw out of the corner of my eye he was fumbling something around, then I heard, 'I'm gonna shoot you dead mis-

Nathan Wonders: Expired Food

Brought to you by Nathan "Invincible" Miller

Ok. Here I was, minding my own business in the Daily Bull office, when all of the sudden I had this urge to try out this popcorn I found in the filing cabinets one day. The best-buy date on the bag said it was good until March 2006, but since it was inside a sealed bag I figured it couldn't possibly go bad and would in fact get better with age like wines and cheeses.

As usual I was wrong and it was gross and really dry, probably because it had no seasoning salt. The moral of this story, however, is that food should not expire in the modern age. I say if it's sealed in plastic, looks like plastic, or really is plastic, it shouldn't go bad. When did they come up with pasteurization? 1860 something? Back then we were shooting each other with muskets. Now we have lasers. There obviously should be a similar improvement of technology for food preservation.

SPAM got close, but we need more. All food should be able to be bought, stored, forgotten about for a couple of months/decades, found, and then served up in a delicious meal. I can't tell you how many times I have found candy bars in random places and been disappointed to find that it tastes worse than a mouthful of dirt. Such a shame.

 Seriously, if fall gets any more awesome I'm going to flip my lid and do a gallon challenge of cider.

...OMG MORE DELICIOUS from front

In classic, 'bitter old man' fashion, I can only blame society.

You see, in the old days, before commercials scared us into trying shady fad diets, asking our doctors about drugs we don't really need, and joining class action lawsuits against the very medical industry claiming to be our savior, America ruled the world of artery-clogging comfort food. Before Oprah Winfrey, PETA, and a very scary man named Richard Simmons decided beef was bad for everyone, a delicious cheeseburger, hearty meatloaf, or satisfyingly messy sloppy joe was a weekly staple of the American diet. From creamy chicken pot pie to gooey macaroni and cheese, we were damn proud to sport the world's largest waistlines and highest cholesterol readings, and our mothers never thought twice about feeding us lots of butter, lard, cream, salt, sugar, and second helpings, so long as we said grace and choked down our vegetables.

Then along came doctors, research scientists, celebrity exercise instructors, and those ever-bitchy dieticians, all constantly bleating about how everyone must change their ways if they want to live to see 80. Soon, dozens of fat-free/cholesterol-free/sugar-free/low-calorie/low-sodium/taste-free foods hit the shelves to be purchased by newly health-conscious soccer moms, feeding the ever growing paranoia of the average American sheep. We suffered through gritty fat-free ice cream, the unholy substitution of ground turkey for ground beef, sugar-free cookies, and vegetable oil 'butter' spreads. We quietly stood by while cheesecake was demonized, ham became a vile curse word, and the consumption of virtually all flavorful foods was made a dinnertime capital offense. Soon, even those sinful bastards at McDonald's sold out, offering rabbit food meals with step-counters and bottled water. Finally, in perhaps the most treasonous move of them all, Cookie Monster was forced into court-ordered rehab and now spends his days telling kids to consume large amounts of? FRUIT! (Thank you to Mr. Colbert for raking the muck in order to get the scoop on that one). Now, it is painfully obvious from the video above that even pizza is becoming vulnerable.

The point is, we've had enough of this shit. America needs to graduate as she can, in order to start putting the calories, fat, and flavor back into the foods we love before it's too late. Do we really want the title of World's Greatest Artery-Clogging Meals to fall back into the clutches of, say, the French? I didn't think so. So with that in mind, I'm off to lobby my senators to send more money up here in support of this fine institution, and perhaps I'll also draft a letter to Pizza Hut urging them to introduce such a great product on this side of the Pacific Ocean. In the meantime, I think I'll see if South Korea can get a group of their six year-old geniuses to work on teleport delivery. ☺

ter!' That's when I opened fire.."

Aghast in horror, even the best medical squads in the area were unable to revive the bullet-riddled body of the young boy, who was declared dead at the scene.

"I don't know if I can go on without my only son. Why did he have to be taken so young?" mourned Colin's mother. "I remember he was so happy when I bought him the new Covert Strike Super Soaker from Wal-Mart on our way home. He told me he was gonna get everybody all wet... now what? Now he's dead!"

"If he didn't want to get killed, then he shouldn't have gone around waving guns at people," Radford said during the investigator's report. "Bullets or water, when I'm on the job I take every threat seriously, even if I would sustain absolutely no bodily harm from the latter. You can't take any chances in the police profession anymore, otherwise you're a dead man."

"Gotta keep an eye out for trouble around every corner," he added. "Even pre-schools aren't safe."

The Super Soaker in question has been recalled by the company for fear that other children may be accidentally killed by rogue cops and other gunmen. With extra rubber fittings and less noisy plastic than the usual squirt gun, the Covert Strike proved to be too easy to conceal for it's own good, finally leading up to poor Colin's unfortunate death.

"We're willing to do whatever it takes to get gain back the trust of parents everywhere that our products won't lead to their children being killed," explained one Super Soaker spokesman. "We are even negotiating with police departments around the country to stage 'Shoot your cop in the face' water competitions. I'm sure the kids will love it."

The question of whether Sgt. Radford overstepped his boundaries while in the line of duty has yet to be answered. Most of population of this sleepy town agreed that a manhunt should be in order, despite fellow police officers stating, "they would have done the same thing."

"An innocent 6-year-old with a water pistol and a strung out 26-year-old Mexican gangster with an Uzi are practically indistinguishable at 7 feet, especially behind tinted glass," says an anonymous officer. "I would sooner accept a few casualties through accident than lose a fellow cop through carelessness."

Over 150 family and friends attended Colin's funeral. He was laid to rest amongst all his favorite dinosaur toys, pokemon cards, and nerf guns, all of which had to be thoroughly searched by FBI agents to be sure the Dalstra family was not burying weapons their zombie son may be able to wreak vengeance with in the afterlife. ☺

Dude.

Did you know that the Daily Bull's very own Nathan Invincible has a WMTU radio show? It's pretty much awesome. Every Thursday (tonight!) from 7-10 pm, he plays the craziest electronic music this side of Mars. He even has a facebook page you should check out: Propaganda Airwaves. You'll not regret it.

Even More Dude.

Did you know that Nathan's friend Milo has a WMTU radio show as well? It's also especially awesome. He plays great Indie and Post-Rock from 7-10 pm on Tuesdays. He even throws some classic rock in there too. Look him up on facebook: Music and Metaphysics. Go!
