Notes From a GM Board Meeting

By Mike Lennon ~ Daily Bull

General Motors has issued a statement to explain their current eco-friendly strategy of car-building. The latest press release has disclosed the meeting minutes of their Saturday board meeting at Chili's. The first portion of the transcript is not available for trade-secret reasons. GM's representative did make comment on the undisclosed proceedings. "After much deliberation and three rounds of voting on proposals, the board agreed on hot wings and artichoke dip for starters, and a round of strawberry-lime-guava margaritas."

With the pressing matters handled, the meeting minutes detailed an unplanned discussion of the next eco-friendly car model ensued.

"It's been a good year people, but we need something new, something really eco-

How to Get Into Trouble Using Zimbra

By Nathan "Invincible" Miller ~ Daily Bull

Now this is a story all about how my email got flipped turned upside down and I'd like to take a minute just sit right there and I'll tell you all about how I got IT to hate on me for abusing Zimbra.

So there I was, minding my own business like everyone else, mindlessly checking my emails hoping that maybe an electronic love letter would magically deposit itself into my inbox. Ha. Instead I got stuff from Wolfram Research and my government professor. Lovely.

Then all of the sudden wham-bam-thank-you-mam Zimbra was born out of the ashes of Squirrelmail, like a phoenix except furrier. We all know how it went. And because I like animal-themed email systems, Zimbra is now Zeembra. With a silent M.

Anyway. I played around with Zeembra for something like 12 seconds until I got bored. Really the only thing that piqued my interest was the chime noise that it made when I got a new email. It was so exciting I almost fainted. Then I sent myself a message just so I could hear it again. Oh boy.

Yeah yeah Rick over at the Lode has been talking about all the great features that Zeembra has, blah blah blah. Zeembra is about the same as every other email I've ever used except for one thing: it has unlimited storage. Or, shall I say, had.

At the end of my 12 second tour of Zeembra, I had come to the conclusion about three things: 1. it was boring, 2. it made a noise, and 3. I needed to figure out if unlimited really was unlimited. You know how things are. You're running around in your video game in a seemingly endless world when you bonk into an imaginary wall. That's how I thought Zeembra would be. Either that or it really was unlimited. I had to try.

Thus, I filled an email up with the max amount of attachments (80 mb) and proceeded to forward it to myself over and over. 1 gb! 5 gb! TEN GIGABYTES. This was so much better than the old system where I only had 100 mb. I filled that up in a week. Now that I was cruisin', I figured I'd set a goal for myself: One Terabyte. How awesome would that be? A whole server to myself, all because it's unlimited.

Of course, I was lied to. We were all lied

Nathan Wonders: Voting

Brought to you by Nathan "Invincible" Miller

Why vote? Whatever happened to the old days of dynastical states where leadership would be passed down to your next of kin regardless of what anybody thought? Ehh, on second thought, having another Bush in office might not be such a good idea.

There are other ways of getting cool presidents in office however. When was the last time we had a coup? Exactly never. What this country needs is not change but some radical psycho to spice things up a bit. The media would love it.

Don't get me wrong. I kinda like America. It's just we do stuff retarded sometimes. Like the Electoral College. There wasn't an Electoral College in Roman times. You know what they did instead to find a new ruler? Build up armies and beat the shit out of each other. Why they don't do that nowadays is beyond me.

Obama using his poison gas attack on McCain.

Imagine that: Obama vs. McCain – The Washington Showdown. How exciting would that be? Heck, I'd pay $49.99 to watch it live on Pay-Per-View. It'd be bigger than the Superbowl! More exciting than the Olympics! Maybe the FCC would even let some of the gore slip through so that we can catch all the action just how it happens. Forget elections. Presidential Fight Club is where it's at.

to. Zeembra doesn't have unlimited storage – eventually everything comes to an end. My end came at 140 gigs when the goons over at IT decided to cut me off. I tried to negotiate but to no avail. They basically told me to delete all 140 gb that I had stored or they would delete them and all my other unimportant emails for me and that if I had found unlimited I would've taken up all the space on their servers and crashed them. Which would've been pretty crazy.

140 gb. That is a lot of emails. All of them I had conveniently placed into a single folder, knowing someday I'd probably have to delete them, which I did. I wasn't going to let them have the last laugh! Emptying the trash, it crashed my Zeembra and likely an entire server along with it. Hooray!

Along with one of the threatening emails IT sent me was a little cut & paste of one of the rules on the email

FAQ page talking about storage space. Thing is, I checked to make sure there was no rule against what I did. Which means they made that after I tried to find unlimited. Another rule made because of me. Score.

So the next time someone tells you that you have an unlimited supply of something, don't believe them. It's only unlimited until you piss them off for using so much. ☹ friendly, like $50,000 of eco-friendly. Maybe we should start using aluminum or titanium for the body frame" -Frederick A. Henderson, President, COO

...CARS from front

"...to make it lighter? And then more fuel efficient?" -some engineer, about to make career ending decision

"Whatever. I want something that will really improve the car, like making it run on something besides gas, like bourbon. I love bourbon. Then we will have to have bourbon everywhere" -Henderson

"... why... wait... no, that will make bourbon really hard to get for everyone, and much more expensive. Just like ethanol, it won't work." -engineer, will be fired soon

"Yeah, but that's eco-friendly. I'm talking things that will really improve this car's eco-friendly stuff. Make it like a Hummer, but bigger, like with six wheels instead of four, you know something to make it $50,000 or $75,000 of eco-friendliness." -Henderson

"We keep saying eco-friendly, but I think you have a different definition than everyone else." -engineer

"Duh, it means better, everyone wants eco-friendly." -Rick Wagoner, CEO

"Yeah, ECO-FRIENDLY, 'Eco' for Economics and 'Friendly' like nice to me, like it means money for me. So if I want it eco-friendly I would make it better by making it cost more money somehow" -Henderson

"Yeah, that's why the Prius costs as much as a house" -Rick

"no, no, no, eco means ecology, like environment, or nature. Eco-friendly cars should be good for NATURE, not just expensive!" -engineer

"If that was true, then why wouldn't we be selling less Hummers, and more electric cars?" -Henderson

"Because we don't make any electric cars! We sell pricey SUVs, and pricier Hybrid SUVs" -engineer

"... no, I'm right and you're fired now. Ooh, hot wings." -Henderson ☹

Putin Offers Position To McCain

By Andrew Ranz ~ Guest Writer

Russian Prime Minister Vladimir Putin offered John McCain the position of president of Russia after his humiliating defeat by Barack Obama. McCain has yet to announce whether or not he will actually take the position offered to him. Governor Sarah Palin has already taken the position of Prime Minister of Georgia according to rumors.

"McCain has shown good aggressive quality that I like in my pawns," Putin said. "He will be good leader for new world order."

According to Michael Pelendechov,

Director of the Russian KGB, McCain has proven to be a valuable asset to Putin's ambitions at becoming the first Tzar of the Third Russian Empire. McCain's aggressive stance toward just about anything, which can be one of the worst qualities in leading the Unites States, is actually one of the best qualities toward leading a growing empire.

"I may have said some nasty things about Vlad in my campaign," McCain said. "But now, I see him in a new light. He might actually not be too bad of a person"

McCain's attitudes of "nuke now, don't ask questions" has been called "admirable" by the Russian Prime Minister. Putin believes this attitude will be invaluable in leading Russian storm troopers into surrounding countries. McCain's experience in the military may have also given him bonus points as a military strategist. Putin believes he will be able to lead the Russian storm troopers into surrounding countries to build the New Empire.

"Hopefully he will be able to lead armies to viktory better dan doze ee-mbeciles who lead invasion into country formerly known as Georgia," Putin said.

McCain seemed to be persuaded into taking the position when he was told he would have unlimited access to countless nuclear weapons which he can lob at anyone who pisses him off. ☹

McCain and Putin have been chums ever since they both finished the "Tough Man Plutonium Gallon Challenge" back in '92. Ever since that fateful day, they have secretly battled terrorism under the code name "Chuck Norris," who they combine to be when evil rears its ugly head.
