

EL TORO DIARIA

The Daily Bull is probably not suitable for those under age 18 and should NOT (that means you Richard Goodell) be taken seriously... like white Mexicans!

The Jig is Up

In an amazing display of the Lode's usual Class-A journalism, they have uncovered the indiscoverable. A crack team of journalists, led by Lode editor-in-chief Richard Goodell, followed a tip from an unnamed source that led them to discover what no one thought possible; that the Daily Bull is actually a satirical paper. The campus community was shocked as many students refused to believe such an outlandish claim.

"I just can't believe it, I mean, the Bull's tradition of integrity and journalistic professionalism has been around for ages," says one concerned and confused student. Many members of the Bull itself are also shocked.

It's a Hard Knock Life, For Superheroes

By Matt "Undercover Minority" Villa ~ Daily Bull

Let's face it, given the choice to be the normal or to have superpowers, almost everyone would choose to have a superpower. Superpowers are cool like that; who wouldn't want to fly, or be able to melt things with heat vision? Maybe you want to run so fast that it makes Usain Bolt go "O me GOD, dat was one fast sunofa Beech!" Or maybe you want to talk to animals, so you can chat with all those squirrels around campus about how your life's never been the same since you went on that safari with your parents (kudos to anyone who gets that awful reference).

Super Powers!

Either way, it's safe to say anyone would love to have superpowers, but many don't realize the crappy side effects of being awesome. Allow me to elaborate.

Super Powers = Super Hero. Although some people are probably

A-OK with being a superhero, the selfish and more 'baller' majority are thinking, "Fuck being a hero, I'm just gonna use my invisibility to steal shit and spy on naked people." Yes, yes, this is all well and good, however just because YOU don't want to be a superhero, doesn't mean people won't MAKE you one. If you are discovered, you will inevitably be guilt-tripped into being a hero, for many reasons including crime, world destruction, and most of all, villains. This brings me to my next point.

Super Powers = Super Villains. According to the Villainy theorem of proportionality, for every one person with superpowers, at least one to three supervillains must exist in the local area of the superperson. This can be due to the freak accident that gave you superpow-

...Austin Super Powers! from front ers giving them powers as well, or taking away something they love. It could also be due to aliens discovering that a human has powers and they decide to attack our once 'mostly' harmless planet. It can even be due to something as simple as the villain being smart, and jealous of your powers. That's right, I'm looking at you, Lex Luthor.

So, you say you just don't care, let the villains run rampant right?
That's where my next point comes in.

Super Powers = Catastrophe.
That's correct, even if you say nuts to all heroic virtue, there is a law that states that for every person with powers, at least one catastrophe that can only be stopped by the previously mentioned person's powers will occur. That means that despite not giving a shit about other people, if you want a planet left to use your powers on, you will need to save it.

So about now, you are probably thinking that superpowers aren't that great, and that's okay. Not everyone is meant to get them, only the truly virtuous, badass, or non-lazy can truly handle them.
Besides, who wants to be held accountable for the $14 million worth of destruction your cat-humping ability caused? ☹

...Conspiracy! from front

From an interview with one of the newer Bull members, "I had no idea what I was a part of. I just showed up, and then they brought in the pizza, and then... nothing. I don't remember anything after the pizza or until the end of the meeting."

Using their amazing journalistic powers of deduction, the Lode team followed up on the pizza (provided by Studio Pizza) and sent in a piece to be analyzed.
The piece in question was found to be laced with LSD, presumably to keep the Bull members coming up with new ideas and then to make sure they forgot them by the end of the meeting.
These ideas would then feed the endless issues of "Miller Time", and articles by a few other writers in the inner circle. Studio Pizza was raided last Friday and arrests were made on drug possession and distribution charges.

A recent issue of the Daily Bull contained a counter-article by the Bull's editor-in-chief Tim Kotula. The article brought up issues with the original Lode's article, such as bad grammar, shoddy research, and many more problematic points. Tim's article then went on to discuss an interview with Richard Goodell in which the matter of who Richard's source was came up. "He wouldn't tell me, and then he said that any good journalist would never ask such a question," says Tim. "I can't believe the nerve of that guy! Due to his article my journalistic integrity has been compromised. Now how will I complete my plans for world domination?

Curse you Goodell!"

Many supportive students and Bull members still deny that the Bull is a satirical paper. In an unexpected twist worthy of its own M. Night Shyamalan movie, the members of the Daily Bull have actually gained popularity. According to a reader of the Daily Bull, "Yea, I used to think they were a bunch of bigoted, foul-mouthed, egocentric pricks.

Now I know they were just kidding." ☹
