Political Correctness Run Amok

By Liz Fujita ~ Daily Bull

If there is any singular injustice that plagues people of all shapes, sizes, colors, and smells, it is this: discrimination. No one appreciates being brought down because of their social or ethnic status, and as such a strange phenomenon emerged - political correctness. New, more complicated phrases like "Asian-American," "historically disinclined," and "vertically challenged" emerged in efforts to make even oddballs like me feel special and included. I've noticed, however, that politically correct phraseology excludes small children, who can't even say half the words we use to "correctly" describe anyone. There should be a SimpleWiki version for the under-tens!

That Feeling

By Nathan "Invincible" Miller ~ Daily Bull

You know that feeling of having butterflies come close, most notably the circus peanut, but in the long run it's not a people, after all, don't get the chance sustainable source of stomach stimulation. Probably not. Most people, after all, don't get the chance to eat a bunch of butterflies, and fewer still manage to do so and have them stay alive in one's stomach. It takes true genius, sword-swallowing skills, or simply good luck to get them down there in one piece and still be able to enjoy their last few wing beats before they become a healthy snack. In the meantime though, butterflies in the stomach is one of the most deliciously nice feelings in the world.

Mmm! Don't you just want a big bowl of lepidoptera for breakfast?

Fact: there are no butterflies in Houghton to eat. Now how are you supposed to feel their little wings stroking the lining of your gut if there aren't any for hundreds of miles?! Blowing leaves and garbage aren't nearly as nice, and dollar bills are better spent on candy. Certain candies

What to do?! Well, if you're not picky or anything, you could eat some mothballs. See, mothballs work a lot like those foam dinosaur pellets that expand when you put them in water. All you gotta do is swallow them and when they hit your gastric juices... poof moths in your stomach! They won't be as pretty or soft as butterflies, but if that's all you've got it's better than nothing.

Other possible alternatives include feather dusters, spider silk, dandelion seeds, and fiberglass insulation. Don't say I didn't warn you though; none of these work as well as genuine, living butterflies for elevating you to the next level of ohhh maaaaaann.

Take it from me folks. I've got this butterfly thing down. Every time I look at the sun, trip and fall and smash my face in someone's flower bed, or simply get really hungry – whom! Butterflies. Even when I don't want them, like in class after I accidentally drank a bottle of expanding foam. The butterflies can strike at anytime, anywhere. This makes for some awfully awkward situations, let me tell ya.

Why, just the other day I was walking around outside when I looked over to my left, smiled, and got some butterflies. Ah, it was great. Then I tripped, a common symptom of having butterflies. But that wasn't about to stop me! I didn't even need to eat butterflies to get their tingling sensations. All I had to do was look around and not pay attention to where I was putting my feet and I was all set.

I only tripped over a few other things on my way home, including a puppy. It's still alive.

I don't know – maybe it was the weather. Maybe it was some sort of chemical released from melting snow. It may have even been a stray alien brain wave from another galaxy. But whatever it was, it won't go away. And thank goodness too, because I was just about to start eating scorpions and cockroaches to get my fix.

Can't get that funny butterfly feeling? Wait a few more weeks. Spring will be here, and the next thing you know it fall will be right around the corner, both prime times to go out with your giant net to catch yourself a hefty harvest of winged beauties. So get out there! Get off the computer! Find yourself a friend and go hunting for good feeling! 🐛 on, Michigan Tech has decided that it would revamp some of the less fashionable nouns on campus. "Dormitories" became known as "residence halls" as the years passed; "freshmen" recently gained the Hogwarts-esque title "first years," and the quintessential cafeteria donned a new "dining hall" hat for as-yet unknown reasons.

"The logic here is anything but arbitrary," insists president Glenn Mroz. "A fine institution like Tech has a responsibility to ensure that every student - and their activities - feels welcomed and respected. We can't allow any more of this political incorrectitude!"

New measures have been promised for the upcoming 2009-2010 academic year - measures that Mroz and other higher-ups insist will make "everything crystal-clear." Clear as especially thick mud, cries the student body!

"I'm not really sure how I feel about all of these PC changes," said Luke Willett, a trustworthy, organized, resident-promoting enthusiasm distribution officer (TORPEDO) in DHH. "It's getting to the point that I can't remember what it was like just being an RA!"

Several student organizations have expressed their dismay at the upcoming edits to Tech-speak. "We already print an acceptable-length newspaper. It's going to waste a ton of ink to be that correct. You could fill in Lake Superior with that much ink!" pointed out Jeremiah Baumann, a Lode staff member. The Daily Bull's own Nathan 'Invincible' Miller added, "We only have the two sides of an 8.5-by-11 sheet of paper to print on. If everything has to be P.C., we'll be using size four font by next semester. It'll be the death of the Daily Bull – what's next, the Thrice-Weekly Satirical Publication With A Joke in the Title About Excrement? Argh!"

The university also plans to spend between "an arm/leg" and "firstborn" on new signs for all organizations, buildings, and departments undergoing name refurbishment. "State-Sanctioned Soul Sucking Society" (S⁵) will replace the marquee above the math department doors. Other phrases to be incorporated with the incoming first-year class will include "monetarily overbearing financial ordeals" (MOFOs, formerly 'Experience Tech' fees).
