Horrors of War

By Stephen Whittaker
~ Daily Bull ~

FRIDAY! IT'S FINALLY HERE AND what better to do than sit down and do a little vegetating to this week's movie: "Horrors Of War" As a movie set in World War II, it seems like it should be a hit, right? Wasn't the case, as I found out in last week's movie, so why not try another?

This movie was also one of those, "I saw the box and it just screamed RENT ME, RENT ME, FOR THE LOVE OF GOD RENT ME." It had a facade of Hitler plastered in the center of the picture with swastikas on either side of the face and an army of what appeared to be SS zombies below him. HOW COULD I NOT RENT THIS?! Well I did, and it wasn't pretty, but hey at least they tried.

We begin with some American soldiers landing on a beach, I'm assuming Normandy, where they quickly move inland. At the same

Headless Zombie Slaughtering CS Majors

By Jeremy 'Mr. Sunshine' Loucks ~ Daily Bull

TERROR IS RUNNING RAMPANT ON CAMPUS AS reports come in on a series of attacks. CS majors are being slaughtered by the tens, leaving the normally timid students in a state of almost complete inactivity. The last time so many were immobile was when "Wrath of the Lich King" came out for WoW.

I first heard about the attacks from my good friend, Mike McCain. His roommate, one Leet Ericsson, was a CS major and stereotypical neckbeard. McCain recounted the horrific experience to me.

"It was real sudden! We were walking to the Café for some Monster and then this... Thing ran out from behind a building. Before Leet could fix his Velcro shoes and run, it was on him. He tried to fight it with some moves he saw in an episode of Dragon Ball Z, but unfortunately he's not a super-saiyan... Then the Thing pulled out a chainsaw and cut his head off!"

Well, I wasn't going to let that spoil my trip. I got my Monster and came back to find a message in his blood saying something about failing a thesis or some junk. I didn't pay much attention because I was dragging my roommate's corpse back to the room. You see, by keeping his body around, housing won't charge me extra for having a solo room!

And unbelievably, he smells BETTER dead than alive!"

I WANT MEOW MIX!
RAAAWRRR!

To get to the bottom of these slayings, I decided to set a trap for the monster. I took a walk with the smelliest CS major I could find, Theodore "Spunky" Fergusson. As we neared the "Glass Boob," a headless zombie jumped out from behind it, wielding a chainsaw! He calmly handed me a piece of paper, then set about mutilating my companion. Between screams of "HELP!", "AHH-HHH!", and "MY SPLEEN!", I was able to read the note.

"Dear non-CS person: I give you this note in the hope that you will understand my

Nathan Wonders: Shorts

Brought to you by Nathan 'Invincible' Miller

NOW THAT IT'S GETTING CHILLY OUT THERE, MOST PEOPLE ARE BUNDLING UP TO GO TO classes. Not me. I'm still wearing shorts and sandals. Yeah, it's kinda dumb, but I've got my reasons.

Reason 1! It's not quite cold enough for pants and everything yet. I've got an overactive body temperature gauge, so I'll be cranking out that heat well into freezing temperatures. Pants = hot.

Reason 2! Wearing shorts and sandals is invigorating. Nothing wakes you up for your 8 a.m. class like slush on your tootsies. Mmmm frost bite.

Don't get any ideas, Nathan.

Reason 3! Having exposed skin keeps me in shape. Since my body's burning more energy to stay warm, I have less body fat sitting around. Sure beats running around on a treadmill.

Reason 4! My brother is gonna try and one-up me this year. He's a freshman at RIT, and they've got some pretty gnarly weather there too. He's been wearing shorts and sandals for the past two years, but he's been living in Texas for most of that. He didn't even own shoes when he went off to college. If I'm gonna maintain my position as the crazy one in the family, I've got to out-last him. He's got a full beard though... so I'm worried. Wish me luck! 🍀 time another group of ex-convict soldiers are on their way to parachute behind German lines to go and destroy a supply depot... and find some doctor who works on secret projects for the Nazis.

They are shot down and end up scattered, not quite reaching their destination. All of the men manage to regroup except one, Byrnes, who got caught in a tree and was captured by Germans. The group meets up with Byrnes later, who tells a tale of having been captured and then some creature killed all of his captors but strangely did not kill him. The two separate groups meet up some time into the film and end up sticking together to take out the supply depot. The two in charge, Lt. Schmidt and Capt. Russo, are talking one night away from the others when they are attacked by the creature Byrnes spoke of. It manages to bite one of them and is shot by the other. The wolf-like creature then turned into a man after being killed. A couple days later the officer who was bitten wakes up in the woods, naked and unaware of what happened. Werewolves and zombies – yes, they did it.

They manage to reach the depot, where they are attacked by deformed SS soldiers who appear to only die when they get shot in the head. When they infiltrate the bombed-out depot, they find the doctor who explains that he had been developing a super soldier for the Nazis. He then injects himself with his latest concoction and turns into some super mutant. They can't seem to kill him, prompting the guy who was bitten to somehow turn into a werewolf despite it being the middle of the day, and attack the now mutated doctor. They end up killing the doctor with a grenade if memory serves me correctly.

Nazis, zombies, werewolves oh my! How could you go sooo wrong? This one is deliciously terrible. It has god awful acting, the kind where the actors try to act serious but it ends up sounding lame. Oh, and did I mention this one even has CGI animated airplanes? This one, I must admit, felt like I could have made with a few friends and access to some good props. Even with all this it still manages to be way more entertaining than War Birds was. I'll give it 3 Zombie Nazis out of 5.

Keep sendin' me yo' ideas, Schwhitta@mtu.edu. I'll keep watching these terrible movies. Someone has to... Till next week! ☺ situation and I implore you not to judge me. My name is unimportant for this story. You see, I was once a happy graduate student in the Forestry department. I had a great fiancé and a promising career. Nearing the completion of my Masters, I realized that I needed some help with my thesis, "Comparing Trees to Other Trees." I needed some graphic design and a short program to show my work to the committee.

"So, I enlisted the help of a friend in the CS department. After a few minutes, he started straining. Then he started swearing. Then he just took off without saying anything. I looked at my computer to see what was wrong, then realized he had accidentally reformatted the hard drive while attempting to "spiffy" up my computer's processing power. All my files were deleted. My thesis was gone on the eve of my presentation.

The following day, I was laughed out of the meeting and out of the department. My fiancé cheated on me with some dude from the geology department. Even my dog got diabetes and died! I lost everything! And all due to the mucking of a bastard "computer expert!" Overcome with grief, I started cutting down some trees, furious at my former major. I slipped and off went my head. However, this proved to be a boon, as it has allowed me to take my vengeance on the Hot Pocket-eating, Inuyasha-watching shut-ins. DEATH TO ALL!!!"

As you can imagine, I was fascinated by his story. By this time he had finished dismembering poor Theodore, but that didn't matter much to me. I wanted to ask him some more questions, but then the unthinkable happened. Jesus Christ the Zombie Slayer appeared and killed him! Again! When I told him that was a bit hypocritical, he vanished in a poof of logic.
