Twilight - The Choice

By Jon 'Big-O' Mahan
~ Daily Bull ~

Well, now that the anti-twilight fever here at MTU has finally died down, it's time I throw in my 2 cents. This is a very serious subject at hand. If you've ever seen those websites that shorten entire books down to single statements, or 5 comments, or other similarly short excerpts, then you know what I'm about to do.

I present to you, Twilight- A young girls choice between necrophilia and bestiality. It's true. If you think about it, she's either going to be shacking up with a hairy wolf, or with a cold glittering dead vampire. Both have their pros and cons, though, right? So, why not, for kicks, break them down, and ignore all that team Jacob and Team Edward crap? (Go Team Jasper!)

Nighttime Society

By Frank McGuire ~ Daily Bull

So we are told that we have an energy crisis on our hands in the world. In order to combat this shortage of energy, we should move to a night schedule. Instead of everyone getting up in the morning and wasting a perfectly good day by going to work or school, we could instead sleep through the evilness that is the sun and then get up and go to work in the evening.

Being in on a night schedule would mean that we would not have any need for windows, thus saving on heating and cooling costs. As it is, 95% of the classes that have windows large enough to warrant turning off the lights still have the lights on, thus defeating half the purpose of the windows in the first place.

Up here [in the U.P.] it is too dark through half the school year anyway for the light coming from the windows to be enough. Heat loss through the windows would no longer be an issue if there are no windows. A lot of people who would rather be outside would not have the distraction of looking outside for two reasons: first, no windows, and second it is nighttime and most people are in class or work or bed.

Just think people: on a day off you can spend the whole day outside, weekends can be outside, and if you don't mind missing a little sleep you can have a good portion of the day to yourself every damn day of the year instead of having to drag your sorry ass to work or class when it is beautiful outside. This schedule would also allow people who live on a farm to deal with their farming businesses and then have some time to go to school without having to miss out on prime time farm activities.

Outside sports could start in the morning instead of the evening and no one would have to worry about running into the night when it is too dark to play. This way, less energy will be used for sporting events and their large lights. Cooling costs in the summer would be much better because no one will be working during the heat of the day.

Another reason that working on the night schedule would be much better is the commute to and from school or work. As it is now, people get up in the morning before the sun rises and then have to drive into work looking into the rising sun or get off work as the sun is setting and drive into the sun as it is setting. Both of these situations could be avoided by working the night shift and not starting until after sunset and ending after sunrise. Also, there is a lot less animal activity during the night hours which would be avoided by motorists going to and from work every day by simply shifting our schedule by a couple of hours. The last reason that I give for going to a night schedule is that we will be at work when the majority of the world's population is up at work, even though it is day for them, this would make international business much more easy and quick and less painful.

All in all, this idea stems from my hatred of sunburn and heat and the fact that I like the dark. I also hardly ever sleep anyway, so what do I care? ☹

Call Me Crazy But....

By Lauren Allen ~ Daily Bull

A typical lecture period is torture. You know those little kids who can't sit still ever, for any reason? Yeah, that's me. The only way I cannot fidget during a lecture is to fall asleep. Until I found a solution: Mountain Dew and coloring.

At my desk at home, there are Avatar toys, a tiny stuffed penguin, a Rubik's twist, and the mammoth from Ice Age. I have been known to instigate games of Hide n Seek or tag, even when no children were present. I have been informed, rather harshly, that adults do not act like this, that I should grow up. My question is, why? Why do we have to stop playing to be grownups? Coloring is helpful to me, yet I'm told by more than one source that it is immature for me to use it to concentrate. So what, taking drugs which I can't afford is more mature than a mindless activity?

If I was reading Through The Looking

Glass, that would be an adult action, but it is a children's novel. Even Harry Potter and Winnie the Pooh are acceptable for adults to read. Adults can play Monopoly, Uno, and other children's games and no one raises an eyebrow. They can play with toys as long as they call it a collection and don't overdo it. They are mature. So are the adults who tell me I am immature, yet can normally be heard complaining about how much life sucks and how they're so stressed out. Hmm.

I can be immature and happy, or mature and miserable. Tough choice.

Now, there are childish behaviors that should be left to the children, like whining, freeloading, and blaming other people for your problems. But try just playing when you're stressed. I'm told Dow is great for Hide n Seek. More importantly, I would love to see how a teacher would react to a roomful of students coloring. ☹

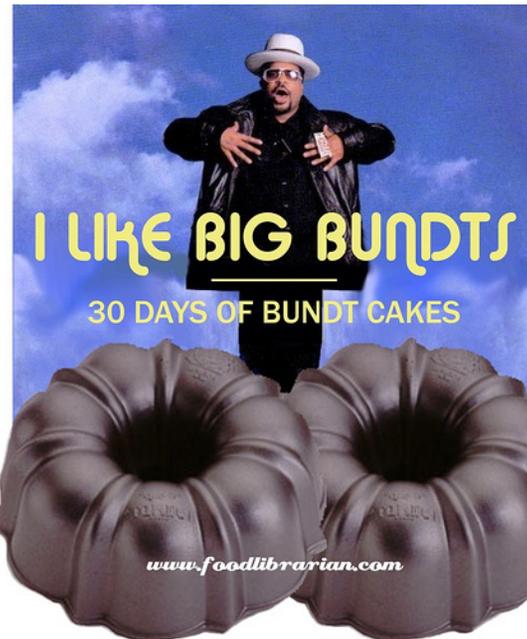

...Vampires for 400? from front

The Choice- Werewolf. Some of the pros would include protection from other vampires. Downsides might include the honeymoon getting a little awkward on the full moon. Although, Werewolves have that whole pack thing going on, so you know if he's not around, his friends and bro's will protect you. On the downside, imagine all the pet hair and pet dander all over you chair! And if you think that's bad, think about your bed. Ugh! Might as well sleep in a fur coat. And God forbid you be into biting, lest you end up a werewolf yourself, or lunch if he gets angry and/or hungry.

The Choice- Vampire. Okay, so you've got a super fast disco ball protecting you. Get a strobe light and you can use this hubby to throw sweet parties. Downside, if you think his cheek is cold, well... I'm just going to leave at 'icicle.' On the bright side, vampires tend to have varied and wide skills, so it's likely if you need something, one may be able to help you with whatever you need. The downside is they might take your blood. Small price to pay. Another upside is that a vampire is unlikely to be turned away by... well... since he likely smells it, and likes that smell. Probably makes him hungry too.

In conclusion, you'd have to be nuts to pick either of them. But apparently Bella is into bestiality and necrophilia I suppose. Some people are just like that. They're just not usually women. Very interesting. In any case it'd be best if everyone just stayed away from either of those choices, because either way, your choice is either a dog or an ice cube that glitters. If all else fails, the loser can shack up with your baby in 18 years, though I wouldn't count on that number... Either way, don't read the books. My Immortal was seriously better, because at least nobody liked that 'book.' ☹
