Why Writing for the Daily Bull is 'Hard'

By Frank McGuire
~ Daily Bull ~

Ok, I have to say it. This "job" sucks. I know, I know, I am doing this voluntarily, but still. I come up with these great ideas for an article and I either write them down on a scratch piece of paper, or on the odd chance I am near a computer I go ahead and type up a little line about the great idea I had. A few days go by and I come across this piece of paper and go "Nice, that should be a good one" or I say to myself "What the duece was I thinking?!" The most common scenario, however, is that I completely forget about the little note I wrote down and then never see it again.

If I do manage to find it, and then remember what the hell I was thinking when I wrote it down, I start typing an ar-

Special Gifts for Special People

by Lauren Allen and Jeremy 'Mr. Sunshine' Loucks ~ Daily Bull

This may be a bit early for a romance article, since it's not even Valentines day yet. But if you read the Bull and date, chances are you need to make up for something. Our readers aren't known for their lack of procrastination, after all. Therefore, I've compiled a list of ideas ahead of time, so you can honestly say you didn't wait til the last minute. Nothing says "shit, I forgot what day it was" like flowers.

HTTP panties.

Found at thinkgeek.com, these come in two styles. One has error messages, such as 403 Forbidden. The other just says "Warranty void if removed." Sexy.

Edible Bouquet.

I know I said flowers were crappy presents. They are, but only if you can't eat them. If they are made of candy or fruit, then they are awesome presents. Chocolate roses are especially delicious. Just make sure they don't melt. Unless you're doing the melting together, in which case cleaning up the mess is half the fun >_>

Forbidden? Babe, maybe you should get tested to make sure you don't have a 502 Bad Gateway...

That One Gift. Better yet, get something they've wanted for a while but haven't been able to find. This works with parents, too. If your grades aren't what they like, but they really really want one album that no store carries, you may be able to get less of a lecture come time to have them cosign loans. Remember, if you illegally download it, don't let them know how you got it. Love is better when people don't know the price you paid for it.

Dates. For the sake of all that is good and holy, don't go on a date that you want. You're the one trying to make their day special. Think about what they've said recently. Did he want to go see Nine and you took him to 9 instead because you don't like musicals? Take him to see whatever musical is out at the time. Does she absolutely love puppies, but you can't stand the squeaky things? Shame on you. Go spend the afternoon at the article and usually get sidetracked by something else, be it class, broomball (YAY BROOMBALL!), beer, or even food. When I'm walking back home, I think to myself and I come up with more good ideas. "Ok, go home and write these down," but as soon as I walk through the door I either completely forget that I even write for the Daily Bull or one of my housemates distracts me into another task. Either way, the ideas never get put down on paper.

This cycle can last as long for a week or longer (Seriously, I have like 20 titles to articles sitting on my desktop with nothing more than a title). When I finally get around to the article, it usually is a lot shorter, much lamer, and not nearly the article I wanted it to be. Oh well... On the good side, now that classes have started and I am working a job where there is some down time between spurts of very busy time periods, so I can sit down and get a solid start on an article. I never know when I am going to be called off to do some task, so homework is not feasible, but writing articles is very possible.

The last part of writing articles that really pisses me off is the ending (pun intended). I write an article that may or may not even be worth the paper it is printed on and it starts to wind down and I can't think of anything that will tie into said article, so I just kinda ramble on until I get bored and say screw it and email it off to the all powerful and mighty that is Invincible and move onto my next task of the moment. ☹
