Drunkness is nothing but voluntary madness" ~Seneca

Carnival of the Ages

By Nathan 'Invincible' Miller ~ Daily Bull ~

Long ago, the Romans used to haul ice and snow hundreds of miles from the Apennine Mountains to construct mighty ice fortresses to appease the Emperor. Now, whether that's true or not doesn't concern me. It sounds true, right? I mean, if they build an ice hotel in Sweden and Quebec every year, why not build an ice castle too?

That's not important though. More pressing matters are at hand. Such as, are you having fun yet? Why are you paying attention in class today? And where in the world Carmen Sandiego? You'd think someone would have tracked her down for all her crimes.

But even more importantly than any of those questions is, are you planning on remembering Carny this year?

Winter Carnival... OF SOULS

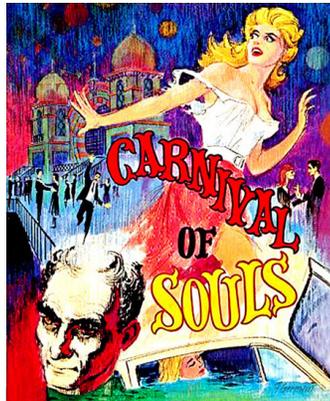

Stephen Whittaker ~ Daily Bull

Well I'm not usually a Wednesday guy but since we don't have a Friday bull this week you get to hear my review today. This week I'm going to take a small departure from the cheap movie reviews and review a movie that was actually good. And since its Winter Carnival, why not review a movie that is themed as such.

The movie I have for you is entitled "Carnival of Souls." Now about the only similarities between this movie and Winter Carnival is the word carnival, but don't be fooled; this movie is well worth the time to watch, unlike most of the movies I review. This should go on your list of movies to watch during carnival. That is, if you're not to busy indulging in alcohol... I mean, sculpting. Yes... sculpting. That's what we do.

The movie was made in 1962 but still manages to be creepy, even by today's standards, at least in my opinion.

It starts off with three girls traveling down a road heading to the city when a car full of boys ride up beside them and challenge them to a drag race. Sounds like the start of any good horror movie made in the 60s. All was fine in dandy 'til that darn bridge came along, at which the road narrowed forcing the boys to run into the girls, causing them to lose control of their car plunge off the bridge into the river.

"She somehow survives but walks away from the crash in an almost zombie-like fashion. Foreshadowing?"

All the girls in the car die, except for one, Mary Henry. She somehow survives but walks away from the crash in an almost zombie-like fashion. Foreshadowing? The police are never able to figure out how she survived. She ends up moving to Salt Lake City to work as an organist at a church. On her way there she passes what appears to be an abandoned carnival which seems to call her towards it.

Throughout the next part of the movie she has increasingly vivid vision of a ghoulish looking man who just stares at her. Not only that, she has moments where the world around her seems to continue without her. No one can see or hear her. It is almost as if she is a ghost. More foreshadowing?

As the movie progresses she seems to become more and more disconnected with people in the world, but at the same time her visions of the ghoulish figure get more and more realistic to her. It culminates in a scene in which she is practicing organ in the church. She begins playing normally enough, but slowly goes into a chaotic piece that climaxes with the pastor of the church asking her to resign.

After losing her job she takes a bus to the abandoned carnival only to find all the passengers aboard the bus are ghouls. She then proceeds to follow them into the carnival, eventually becoming part of it. There is a bit more to it but it but I'll leave it to you to either figure it out or watch the movie.

Unlike most of the piles of feces I watch, this movie was good. I give it 4.5 demonic carn-evils out of 5. Until next week, have a wonderful Winter Carnival!

Make it a night to remember talk about like you remember. Wrestle your friends in the snow. Build illegal snow statues. Run around and mingle with thousands of fellow cold lovers. Whatever you do, make sure to have fun, especially if it'll be possibly your last Carny ever. So bust out of class like a bad 90s movie and hit it up like you've never done before! And if you see a guy in a wicked cool glowing mask, give him a high five. It might just be someone you know.
