Airports

By Alec Hamer ~ Daily Bull

Like many college-aged kids, I decided to go on my per annum trip to somewhere warm and "exotic". My family chose Florida, a state with an official motto: "Florida. So many old people, so little time." Now this isn't to say that I didn't have a good time, it is just now I am in an airport with nothing to do. Unfortunately the "free Wi-Fi" provided by Tampa Bay International is out, so I thought what better to do than sit about and comment on the oddities around.

Currently, I am seated in a very uncomfortable stainless steel box where I'm pretty sure the pay phones used to reside. I think that everybody that sits in these things thinks they are like heavily insulated or something. I was sitting in my box and in the box next to me sat a salesman who had no idea that I

Weekly Weather Report, Chrome Addition

By Bryne Judy ~ Daily Bull

So, students, fellows of learning, if you are reading this you have survived spring break for better or worse and made it back to your academic cage. I wish you luck completing what assignments you have, and... Some crazy weather we've been having, huh?

I was driving back from a much desired vacation destination with some of my compatriots when we were suddenly assaulted by a torrent of freezing rain. Shortly after, tornados began springing up and lifted the car into the air. Happily for us, we were able to both save money on gas as the terrible winds gently carried us home at phenomenal speeds and get quite the view of the variety of weather-based miracles occurring across our fair land. Here are a few of the oddities I remember from my voyage through the sky.

Scented Hail. Nothing brightens up the experience of having both one's body and one's worldly goods pelted with hundreds if not thousands of tiny pellets of ice at high speed like a subtle hint of lime. Yes, the vague, all natural scents that hail comes in these days really take the edge off the frozen pain. Be it lemon, mint, spring meadow, or even original, any scent is sufficient to momentarily distract you from the fact that what could probably be called the manifestation of your non-liquid assets are being slowly crushed by the bludgeoning of these crystalline marvels. You've gotta love those marketing directors up in the sky, man; they really know how to throw stuff out there.

Rain falling up. Sometimes nature has seizures too. I witnessed one of those as the ground opened up many tiny holes from which high speed bullets of water flung themselves into the sky. Cats and dogs, as well as more clothed mammals, were driven into the confines of their homes by these freakish showers. Possible causes include ground water finally deciding to fight back, one too many flooded basements, or

Richard Nixon's vengeful spirit which has never forgiven the world for that Watergate incident.

Snowfall localized such that the frozen water assembles itself into statues.

Everyone loves shaped colossi crafted from ice and show. Few people like working many sleepless nights building them. How fortuitous, then, that the snow which I witnessed falling seemed to be assembling itself into these constructions without the influence of a guiding hand. There has to be a Nobel in there for the aspiring mind that figures out the mechanism behind that.

Happy Water. Acid rainfall, or happy water as I like to call it, is only one of the many joys the industrial revolution has brought us. Just think what it would be like if noticeable amounts of carbonic acid didn't periodically pour on us from the sky, to brighten our days and color our skin black, under which we can frolic and enjoy the beautiful world as it is. I'll tell you what I think it would be like; I think Captain Planet would get out of the ground again and start breaking walls left and right. That guy's a dick, much like Nixon's vengeful spirit.

Don't let the strange occurrences throw you off balance, good fellows! Fall's weather is just like that sometimes, you have to live with it. 🐾 could hear everything he said. He was obviously talking to a coworker try... OH NOO!! That was close, I almost got trapped by a Jehovah's Witness. That was scary.

Anyway, oh yeah I think the salesman was trying to force a member of his team (he was an important salesman) on to another team leader. He was going on and on about her, but it was obvious. She wasn't really good at what she did (obvious from the lewd terms he used to describe her). But apparently she is a real cool gal, investing in a "porn-o website" but according to him "that's another story." Also, she used to sell drugs. According to him this only raises her "coolness" status. Still pondering that one.

What else... Well the salesman left a while ago and now two foreign men are occupying his seat. I would pop my head up to get a better look, but I think that would be in bad taste. They sounded Eastern-European, perhaps Estonian. I've heard that the Estonian mafia is big in this part of town so I think it best to leave them alone. I have also seen a number of people buying what appear to be giant boxes of cigarettes. Not cartons per se, but like a pack of Marlboros made for the Na'vi. I wonder if the cigarettes in the boxes are bigger as well, like blunt sized cigarettes. That would be insane.

Hmm. Let's see. Oh, well I fell asleep a while ago only to be awoken by the screams of children playing in the play area. Little to my knowledge, it appears to be that they are the same kids that were in the same plane as me on the way down to Florida. Thrilling. Now I get to listen to their yells and screams once again while locked in the flying form of a city bus with them. What's more, their mom just stepped outside for a cigarette break. Maybe I could recommend her an XXXXXL Marlboro. Shit, the plane is leaving. Time to go. 🐾
