Screaming Fruit: Modern Marvel

By Bryne Judy ~ Daily Bull

For many a year, I have held within my heart an aspiration, a lofty goal which I feel would benefit only myself but everyone; the production of screaming fruit. Now, don't get me wrong. I am not joking. I am not attempting to be facetious. I am not attempting to tickle the fancy of many-a-reader with this endearingly absurd idea. I am quite serious, and if I could dedicate the next forty years of my life to the production of this... this beautiful pinnacle of man's fabrication abilities I would do so without a second thought.

Some would call them an abomination to nature, a hideous terror that was never meant to exist. Some would call me mad to pursue such an aim, another sad soul consumed by the illness that takes many minds in these shifting times. Nay. Nay! I am a man of vision, and the fruit of that vision would be a fleshy, plant based seed-bearing creation

Appetite for Destruction Filled, Claims Local Revolutionary

By Nathan "Invincible" Miller ~ Daily Bull

Dollar Bay radical Mark Rolland has satiated his desire for massive chaos and widespread ruin, the independent guerilla claims. With his agenda nearly complete, he can finally rest easy knowing all the pieces are in place for the downfall of the flawed society around him.

"With this master stroke, the corruption, the deceit of the people, the economic instability, all of it will finally come to a fiery, climactic end," declares the former Michigan Tech maintenance man from his lofty perch on his Airport Rd. home. "The oppression of man by man ends here! This day will be remembered for millennia as the day when true freedom began!"

The Osceola Township Office suffered minor damage when Mark, in a fit of revolutionary fervor, knocked over two handicap parking signs, took an axe to the "barriers of justice" decorative hedgerow, and drew an anarchy symbol in pink chalk on the sidewalk leading to the building.

According to Rolland, his struggle to free the masses from the "Dollar Bay propaganda machine" was well on its way to a definitive success. Surveying the carnage wrought during his midnight raid from a safe vantage point, he contemplates his next move while basking in the glory of his magnificent victory.

"Dollar Bay will fall by year's end," he proclaims to Juniper, his loyal chocolate lab and only friend. "The crooked heads of state will beg for mercy and grovel at my feet. Soon, all of the Upper Peninsula will be under our rule. We will be unchallenged!"

Local officials are reportedly at a loss of how to prevent Rolland's advances on their stranglehold of power, bumbling around aimlessly hoping that someone, anyone, can save them. After debating imprisoning half the population on suspicion of collaborating with Rolland's rebel activities, they retired to their publicly-funded chateau to enjoy hors devours and sip on imported wines.

Rolland, poster sign in hand, shouted to the proletariat from Dollar Bay's empty streets. "The power-hungry regime must be deposed! Their scandalous actions cannot go unanswered! With this opening blow, we can finally attack the underlying structure to their rotten core!"

Onlookers driving past witnessed seeing Rolland marching back and forth across Main Street, his proud high step instilling fear into their hearts and convincing them that here was a man they shouldn't toy with.

"At first when I saw him, I thought he was out of his mind, spouting his chants and what not," says Sara Goodell, of Lake Linden. "The more I listened to him, though, the more I thought he might be on to something. Maybe he should take his fight to an even bigger stage, say Russia or China. I'm sure he'll find greater success there."

capable of expressing discomfort and/or pain via auditory means.

Now, one lacking the supreme insight I possess might ask what possible use there could be for bestowing the capacity for violent expulsions of air on the reproductive mechanism of plants. Why, there are many, good sirs and ladies, many different merits supporting this research, and first among them would be the research advancements. We in the science business are currently excited to have mapped the human genome. This lets us see stuff, which is good. It's better to be enlightened to the inner workings of things than to wallow in one's own lack of vision. That's all we can do with that, though; the genome remains locked.

My glorious quest would go not one but two steps beyond this by mapping, changing, and splicing the genome of two separate creatures (the common banana and the noble howler monkey, of course), and in the process untold volumes of scientific data would be discovered. The uses for said data would be neigh-infinite!

Your alarm clock not getting you up properly? Replace it with a bunch of bananas possessing a far greater potential for making noise. Your kids won't be quiet? Crack an apple and they'll cower before the torrent of sound you have unleashed. That one guy over there's dog won't shut up? Scare it into submission with but a single, well-placed grapefruit that sounds like a tiny, tangy bit of the apocalypse in a yellow skin.

It need not stop there, either! By the time I get oranges to howl at the moon, I could probably figure out, with little more trouble, how to make giggling grapes, crying tomatoes, grunting potatoes, and even perhaps a noble choir of blueberries to serenade a loved one with. Look upon my vision, fellow Techians, and think of the grand future that would await us! Ah... the profits would also help fuel my proposed research on developing biological spacecraft born from a fusion of tree and insect... but that's a little farfetched for now.
