Elite Four Passes New Revive Laws

By Jon "Big-O" Mahan
~ Daily Bull ~

The Elite Four this Sunday, met for the tenth time this year to go over new laws that would make them more powerful. Complaining that up-and-coming trainers could beat them even when they are drastically out leveled and out-typed, through a use of a Pokémon meat shield like Snorlax or Lapras, and many revives, the Elite Four has banned the use of the item 'Revive' and 'Max Revive' during fights. The vote was 3-1, with only Lorelei not voting yes. The bill has already been met with some resentment and harsh words despite its recent introduction and 6 month lag time before it can take effect. The breakdown of the bill is as follows.

First of all, Trainers may only carry 6 revives when entering the Elite Four battle challenge. This is down from their previous allowance for revives of ` However many you

Sunshine's Sports Corner

By Jeremy "Mr. Sunshine" Loucks ~ Daily Bull

Let's talk about sports.

-NCAA MARCH MADNESS! Bouncyball! Lots and lots of it! In the men's Division 1 tournament, only four remain: Duke (the only 1 seed), West Virginia (the hillbillies... er, Mountaineers), Butler (talk about a home field advantage), and Michigan's very own Michigan State. That's right, the Spartans have done it again and advanced to the final four. This is the sixth time in 12 years they've done this. Geez, might as well book the hotel rooms before the season starts. For those of you with brackets (and if you don't have one, shame on you!), most of your teams are out, including the "sure thing" teams like Kentucky and Kansas. Oh well, better luck next year!

Speaking of NCAA Basketball, our women's team played Emporia State this last week down in St. Joseph, Missouri (home of the Oregon Trail! I loved that game in elementary school...). However, it wasn't all fun and games for the Lady Huskies, as they fell to the eventual Division 2 champs, 91-85. Now, I was at the game. I will complain about refs now and again, which is funny because a lot of you know me as a Broomball Ref. This game was beyond complaint worthy. It was horridly officiated.

Yes, Emporia State played hard and scored more points than we did. But there were more phantom traveling calls than there are kids in the Brady Bunch. Some of the Emporia girls were more thugs than basketball players and got away with flagrant elbows and attacks. This was frustrating to see because if our girls so much as looked at the ESU girls, we were called for a foul. Refs are there to keep order, not completely change the makeup and results of a game, and they should be ashamed of themselves.

Of course, you can't let this final loss diminish what the Lady Huskies have done this season. They set numerous records, both individually and as a team.

-NHL Playoffs shaping up. Shifting gears a little bit, the teams making the playoffs in the NHL are almost set. Calgary is a longshot, but a choke job by Colorado or the Kings will get them in. Detroit is a lock to continue their ridiculous streak of making the playoffs. The East is a little jumbled, but Washington is going to win that division anyways so it doesn't matter what the seedings are.

-MLB Spring Training. Spring training is almost over. This is that magical time of year when everyone knows where they'll be playing and who gets to wear the big boy pants and play with the main club. The Twins are in dire straits after their amazing closer, Joe Nathan, is done for the season due to surgery. Also, in a bid to boost attendance and bolster another sinking ship in Washington, President Obama will be throwing out the first pitch for the Nationals this year. Too bad they can't get a talent bailout as well.

-Quick notes. The NBA's Nets have avoided becoming the worst team in history, winning only their 10th game of the season. Imagine how it feels to lose to them, which the Pistons and Spurs have recently done. It's like getting beat in arm-wrestling by a cheerleader; you might as well kill yourself. Also, in MMA, Shane Carwin beat the living piss out of Frank Mir. I'd update you on WWE stuff, but I'm probably the only person at Tech that watches it (Y2J!!). 🐼 can fucking buy.' Secondly, Revives shall not be allowed to be used during a battle. One may only revive their Pokémon after a battle has been decided. Thirdly, should a trainer be caught using a revive in battle, they will lose all their revives, and have to start at the beginning. If this happens three times, then the trainer must lose all of their gym badges, and begin again. There are numerous hidden riders in the bill. Along with them is a stipulation to limit Full Restores, Max Potions, and Hyper Potions to two times the number of Pokémon in your party, while leaving 3 times your Pokémon for any other healing devices that a trainer may have.

Trainers across the nation are revolting and threatening to end the Elite

Four because of this. They argue that they have the right to use whatever means to defeat the Elite Four that they see fit, and these stipulations limit them. If they want to use a Lugia, they should, if they want to use a revive, they should! And many other people agree with them. However, the Elite Four stands by its rights.

We, the Association of the Elite Four for Determining Upcoming Pokémon Masters, or AEFDUPM, stand by our rights to determine the means and ways by which a Pokémon trainer may be determined a Pokémon master. Since we have to ability and duty to assign Upcoming Pokémon Master to a trainer, it is our duty to make sure that said trainer is qualified for their job, and thus is well able to fight without the use of a cheap item to revive their level 100 traded Latias...

Several regions have begun to sue the Elite Four, among them Sinnoh, Hoenn, Kanto, and Johto, saying they have no right to determine what laws are for the regions branches of the Elite Four. 🐼
