Sarah Palin to Speak on Campus

By Alec Hamer ~ Daily Bull

It appears to be that Sarah Palin, former Governor of Alaska, will be making a stop on her "paint the streets red" tour where she hopes to "really show the lame-stream media that commonsense conservatism is alive and well."

During her stop, there will be many activities set up around campus including a free lecture entitled "Birth Control: it's not for everybody" by Bristol Palin. On top of that Todd Palin is setting up a combination monster truck rally and gun show in the SDC. Oh, and Fox News will be making a heavy appearance to make sure that only Palin supporters are portrayed in a positive light.

Campus Crusade for Christ will most surely be around, doing whatever it is they do (I'm pretty sure it involves chalk and conversion but I'm not entirely sure). College Republicans

Philosophize Your Doom!

By Nathan "Invincible" Miller ~ Current Daily Bull Dictator

As I write this during my World Mythologies class, I'm being bombarded by philosophy. Please, somebody, build a time machine and come back and save me. It's out of control. Hurry, you must use your newfound powers for good. Save me!

See, I'm an American. I know plenty of history – above average I'd say, especially nowadays. Even some world history. Facts, major theories, I've got it all straight. I can handle history lectures just fine. What really kills me is philosophy. I like things as they are, with only one real answer. Isn't that how things work? Nobody really questions why Napoleon invaded Europe or Xerxes invaded Greece. They just had big egos.

These are solid facts, or at least widely accepted. Philosophy, on the other hand, is unbearable. Or at least listening to this guest lecturer we've got is. "This is beautiful right here... Look at what Dionysus did. Wow. That's pretty intense." And so on. I've never seen someone so engrossed with made up religious interpretation. It's extremely excessive, and I'm not learning anything.

Now, I know all religion is up for debate and I'm not gonna get into that. However, Greek mythology, in my mind, can be treated as fact. Fact in the sense that we have a general consensus as to what people actually believed. They believed Gaia and Ouranos did their thing, had some Titan children, who eventually wound up being beaten out by the Olympians and so on. I like facts. When I signed up for this class, I thought I'd be learning all about these well-worn truths.

Unfortunately, I was horribly wrong. ...see Philosiraptor me on back

Yes, we learned 'facts' for a few weeks, but it eventually would devolve into a philosophical discussion every day. We'd read an interesting story about Oedipus, which would then turn into why we all want to kill our fathers and sleep with our mothers. Yeah. I never listen to Freud crazies, especially when they claim everything can be interpreted as a giant penis. For all I care, they can take their silly little theories about life and down 'em with a gallon of cyanide. Not for me.

"This is really interesting... before 508 [BCE], we had certainty. After 399 [BCE], we had philosophy. Wow. And then tragedy, tragedy was right in the middle. Certainty, tragedy, philosophy. Are you seeing this? This is impressive stuff." Yeah dude, keep your pants on.

Do philosophers realize they're completely full of themselves? Maybe instead of thinking about life and past events' "real" meanings, they should think about how useful they are towards progressing our society. Then, when they find out they're good for absolutely nil, they'll all swim out to sea and leave us alone, saving Earth's oxygen for people who actually do things for a living.

It doesn't help that it's a beautiful day and I have stuff to do. It doesn't help that he's in love with his lecture. It doesn't help I've had a strong prejudice against philosophy since I was, say, two. Is there and good to say about it? Of course not. Think about it - if you were in my place and someone invented a time machine with potential to save you, would you want them to debate whether it is morally right, even for a good cause? No! You want them to save you right now before your brain collapses from philosophical exhaustion.

So please, future time travelers, have mercy upon our poor souls. And please, philosophers, just give it up. Nobody wants to hear it. ☹ will be about, participating in a practice known as "teabagging" that has deep origins going back about 1 year. According to Wikipedia teabagging is "the act of a man placing his scrotum in the mouth of a sexual partner," more power to them. Along with all the hype comes the opposition. Keith Olbermann went on record saying, "If the American people ever want to circumvent the discombobulating customs of the right, we must never forget the tyranny that the previous administration imposed upon this picturesque country and her inhabitants." I don't even know what that means. Michael Moore came out of the woodwork, only to be pushed right back in. And it seems that Al Gore released a public statement expressing his concern for the amount of CO2 emitted by Palin's tour bus as he sat comfortably in his private jet.

All in all it's going to be an interesting week. ☹

Ruben Rants: The Pussi-fication of Scary Things

By Ruben Garcia ~ Daily Bull

Vampires, werewolves, dragons. World, these things are supposed to be scary SCARY! Not sparkling pent-up Mormon orgasms, prepubescent man-children, or colorful cat/bee like object. These things are supposed to be scary! I am sorry, but I just saw How To Tame Your Dragon, and it was a good movie. But half-way in the movie between where the dragon rolled around in grass that got him higher than a kite and when he returned to the "hive" to feed the queen, a realization hit me.

I used to think dragons were cool, not cute. Fire-breathing beasts that could destroy an entire village with an unfortunate bit of indigestion. Those are dragons, not this friendship-laden claptrap. Yes yes, I sound like a crotchety old man. But think about it. What was the last SCARY movie you saw. And I mean scary as in fear, not gore-scary like Saw XXXVII or Turista [I actually got my money back for that one]. Ok now lets narrow that list a tad more, did ANY of them contain vampires, werewolves or dragons? I thought not. I rest my case, QED.

Let's have a horror Renaissance ok? A count teaching my kids how to....well...count. Ok, fine. A vampire now attempting to seduce my daughter now that he has taught her how to count? Not ok. A dragon teaching the values of friendship, ok. An entire series of television shows showing said friendship in action every. single. day. no. [I am looking at you Puff]. So just keep in mind, it's a slippery slope out there. ☹
