Ruben Rants: Pass it on!

By Ruben Garcia ~ Daily Bull

Really people. Its not that hard. Get a piece of paper, sign it, and then pass it on. Ugh. Today is a class we had a chance for extra credit by signing up to be human lab-rats. Not for the chem-sci, but I digress. The teacher put two sign-up sheets out, one at the front of class, one at the back. I was the fifth person in the row, so logically the fifth person to get the sign-up sheet.

One would think it would take maybe 2-3 seconds to write the name and time you want. BUT NOOOOO. Like that one person who decides it's the opportune time to balance their checkbook while they are paying at the grocery or that person that pays for a stick of gum with a credit card with cash-back, these people took FOR-EV-ER!

The first one took it and wrote his name like a decent human being in a matter of seconds. The second decided to check and see where the previous wrote his name and then use factor-analysis to find the optimal day, hour,

I WILL STAPLE YOUR FACE

By Liz Fujita ~ Daily Bull

Back in the olde dayes when dinosaurs roamed the earth, dirt was young and fashionable, and I was a calculus student, I had certain expectations of graders. We all did. We wanted near-instant feedback, helpful comments, and preferably a good grade. "The grader" was a nice, hypothetical entity who was to blame for every homework-related qualm we could think of.

Some years later, after the great meteor struck and my Stegosaurus friends died off, I reached enlightenment. I passed through the fiery inferno of calcs two and three, and at the end of the tunnel was a strange glowing light. It wasn't a holy glowing light that spoke to my soul, nor was it a bright train headlight illuminating everything. The light I saw was more like a lava lamp: blobbing around, it cast glows of alternating colors on my eyeballs. "Oooooooo..." I said.

It was at that point that the lava lamp started smoking and steaming, coughed, and spat a red pen into my hand. Wiping the gel from the cap, I realized what the great lava lamp wanted me to do.

$$\frac{1}{n} \sin x = ?$$

$$\frac{1}{n} \sin x =$$

$$six = 6$$

That's my kind of Calculus.
If only Calc2 were that easy...

It wanted me to grade. AND GRADE I DID! But young mathematicians of Michigan Tech, the lava lamp did not provide me with all the necessary wisdom to grade. No, it just gave me my mighty red sword. I would like to share with you what I learned.

Firstly, students who don't staple their papers are ANNOYING. Folding the corners doesn't count - not even if you do the little tear that goes the other way. Clever, but B for effort. It makes graders nuts to have your papers flying around everywhere, page one as far from page two as many CS majors are from pretty girls. If you do not staple your papers, your grader will steal away into your room at night and take every last undergarment you own, then burn Next, it is critical that people tear/cut/rip/bite off the fringes. You know, those little tabbley things on the side of your page when you rip it out of the notebook? Find a way to remove them. Most notebooks are perforated, people; think of it as burning a half of a calorie if that's what it takes to get you to remove the little chits. They make papers stick together and not align; and you know everyone is just a little bit OCD about having a neat stack of papers. No one likes chitty paper.

People who divide by zero, even on one passing homework assignment, are scary. I have almost had a heart attack three times this semester!! Don't scare me like that!! Even if it means leaving a problem at $(2x+5)/(x-x)$, please consider my poor little heart before you carry out that subtraction and write zero.

Problem:

Find x.

$$x^2 + 5x - 6 = 0$$

Solution:

Here it is.

I would have given him the points. Better than my answer. (FLAG TAKEN!)

Lastly, there are a few creatures of the deep that all graders fear. It's worse than the dark, worse than the monster under your bed – hell, it's worse than Michael Jackson under your bed! These terrors are known as the "handwriting disabled." The ones for whom you can't tell a 0 from a 6 from an O from an 8. The ones whose 2's kind of look like a's. This goes for both genders!! Gents, slow down, write more carefully. Ladies, excessive curls and cutes and rounds are not necessary. You don't need to flirt with me via integrals.

These are but a few of the life-altering lessons I've learned from being a grader. I think it has also caused me to write everything with a great deal more care and structure. I now know that on the other side of campus, some poor soul is sitting in a study lounge at 2:15 in the morning, clinging to a Mountain Dew, rubbing the tiredness from their bloodshot eyes and just... wanting... to know... where the FUCK... you wrote the answer to NUMBER 15!?

minute, second, shirt, pants, shoes, kitchen combination that would best suit them. And then he passes it to the slowest person in existence. She can't even make up her mind then. She has to pass it to her friend who signs up for his day...I am next at this point...then passes it back to her.

Ok, I can understand, they are friends, they want to do it at the same time[dirty]. BUT SHE TAKES 5 MINUTES JUST SITTING THERE STARING AT THE PAPER! UGGGGGGH! I am sorry for that outburst people. But seriously, just sign it and pass it on. Like I did. Get sheet, look for Tuesday slot, do I have class then? Nope. Sign sheet of paper. Write date and location down. Pass on. It took me about 4.75 seconds to do all that. I challenge you to beat me, for all our sakes.
