Alien Invasion Fail?

By Sam Schall ~ Daily Bull
 Albuquerque, UP – In Albuquerque, tonight, we find several bodies of rather large, human shaped bees laying throughout the city borders. These large insectoid creatures have not been identified by any federal scientific laboratories yet, so several samples have been sent to numerous universities and independent laboratories to help understand the structure of these creatures.

One lab has found that the creatures' DNA has several popcorn shaped organs throughout its body, most seem to have extremely odd and unknown functions, though some are speculating that it have something to do with the probably odd digestive system of the creatures, seeing as they were witnessed eating only potatoes.

Incorrectly Predicted Weather Results in Devastation

By Kyle Roe ~ Daily Bull

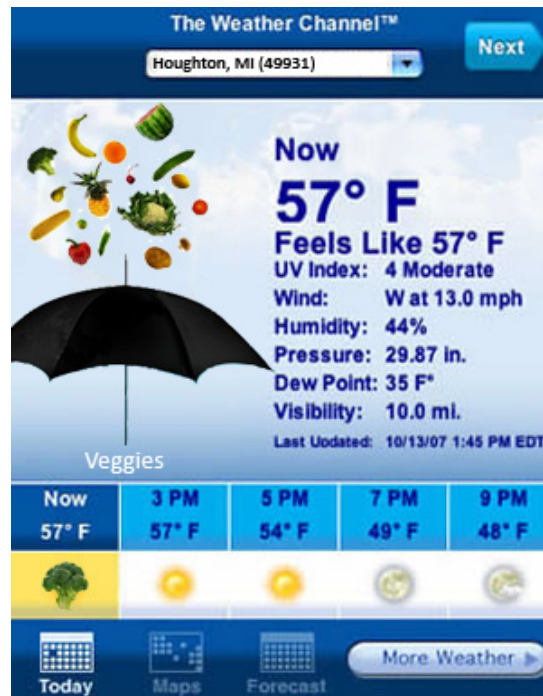

Earlier this week, the local school newspaper had predicted the recent storm as being the 'greatest thing to happen to Michigan Tech since the release of WolframAlpha.' It was predicted to be a light shower, with a 70% chance of falling gumdrops, a 80% chance of falling Twizzlers, and a shocking 90% chance of falling Twinkies. This highly anticipated storm brought great joy to the students of Tech, and the local newspaper was showered with fame for such an honest and wonderful prediction.

However, as we have all learned from the decimation and death that followed the day after, that local newspaper had predicted wrong. Dead wrong. The unprecendented and unexplainable downpour of brussels sprouts, that off brand of lickish candy that no one likes, and Sno-Balls, had utterly wrecked the local area.

It all started during the morning rush hour, when hard, golf ball sized brussels sprouts came crashing down on many students and their cars. Those that did not die from being struck by the brussels sprouts found themselves driven into mental insanity as the sprouts made them remember of when their parents

... From Spacel from front per Peninsula of Michigan, where Bugs Bunny was reported to once try going, the researchers were trying to figure out the rate of rigor mortis for the creatures, or if post mortem for these creatures caused different effects. The body for research arrived and was extremely flexible and "quite bendy" – as one student worker suggested.

A similar occurrence has happened before in Japan...

One slightly crazy/insane researcher was using MATHLAB in putting together the data from her research and noticed the data from the height and weight measurement collected were very similar to a fruitcake – the universe's dumb pile for everything that seemed odd in a species.

"We are still looking for more evidence from the bodies to find if and they compared the moving creatures to those he saw in "Invader Zim", a television show from his childhood.

"Though there were tons more than those who were left, but they starting fighting like my parents and the female ones" – when questioned how he knew they were females, he mimicked a large chest, "-were motioning furiously. I think that was when the female insects started killing their mates, and a few of the males were taken back to the big ships. Maybe for dinner?"

The teenager left it at that comment, mumbling about being hungry... Anyway, there has not been any more evidence gathered in the past few days, and, even if there have been more events such as Albuquerque, UP, the government probably has covered it up at this point. The final gathered data points to this having been just a lost group of space travelers who got lost and females being violent when the males didn't stop at the local rest stop and ask for directions... typical men.

... Brussels Sprouts from front forced them to eat them for dinner. Then, after the brussel hail storm, old melting lickerish began to splash down onto the pavement. Like they are normally found in their package, these off brand licorice were melted and sticky. Everywhere they fell they stained and ruined clothes, pavement, cars, and even the rock garden. Unlucky girls, and some guys, who were out in the storm with their long hair, have been forced to shave off the sticky messes. Also the rock garden has been scheduled to be removed. The school board stated that they do not want the now licorice colored rocks to be confused by drunk students as candy.

Finally, as night began to approach, and it seemed like the end was near, a blizzard of Sno-Balls rushed across the Keweenaw. Thankfully this did not come as much of a disaster, only a few people with coconut allergies got sick. And anyone with actual taste just drove up to Walmart and bought Twinkies. At least those that survived the onslaught of the day got their Twinkie fix.

News Flash: Foot Shoes

By Jon "Big-O" Mahan ~ Daily Bull~

As many of you may have seen around the campus recently, there has been a disturbing rise of foot-wear about. Foot-wear isn't what you think it means. It's not a shoe, or sandal, or anything like that. No, foot-wear, as it is defined by the recent trend, is a shoe which looks like and conforms to your foot. Yup, thats right, now you can go barbarian without even dirtying the bottoms of your sensitive little feet.

Scientists now worry about the possible side effects of the foot wear. "We designed the shoe to be edgy for people on the coasts, more specifically the west coast, where bare feet don't tend to be bear feet. With them being worn in such an alien and foreign climate, we're worried about several of the side effects."

Side effects include: looking like a tool, feeling like an idiot, the stares of feet obsessed people, freezing toe, tool-tripping, and OMG WHAT HAPPENED TO MY FEET, I CAN FEEL SNOW IN MY BONES-itis. Scientists are particularly worried about that last one. If you or a loved one you know seems to be exhibiting any or all of these symptoms, buy some god-damned real shoes.
