Fashion Alert: Skinny Jeans!

Brought to you by Nathan "Invincible" Miller

Ever since I wrote that article claiming to not know anything about fashion, I've spontaneously become a major fashion critic. No, not the kind that goes around watching anorexic girls tip-toe down catwalks like robot slaves; I'm more the "Oh-my-god-Becky-look-at-her-(blank)" type of critic. And believe me, there's tons to complain about.

Take skinny jeans. Three types of people wear skinny jeans: skater punks, hipster musicians, and wannabe skater punks and hipster musicians. According to my latest findings on the subject, zero types of people should wear skinny jeans. If you do and are suddenly irate at my accusations, try to follow this logic:

Why wear skinny jeans? If you're a girl, you probably want to show off your

Bad News for Coach Purse Company

By Jon "Big-O" Mahan ~ Daily Bull

In a recent and most unfortunate turn of events, the Coach Company, responsible for those overpriced and ridiculous looking hand bags and purses, is being sued under a class action lawsuit. The reason for this lawsuit is a recent find that Coach purses are a carrying agent for a virus previously unknown to man.

"I had no idea that there was a virus in there. I bought one of these purses for my wife because I couldn't afford jewels for her, and she loved it, but over time, she became brain dead, and I don't know why," an upset customer and bringer of the class action law suit complained.

Until recently nobody had suspected a thing was wrong with the purses until it became quite clear the loss of intelligence associated with the purse. Often belonging to blonde women in orange and LA county, aptly called valley-girls, the purses seemed to have a shocking coincidence rate with stupidity in the female gender. It seems that exposure to males is generally brief

It used to be you could get stupid for free, but now they charge you like, um, 600 bucks, to be like, um, an idiot!

enough that men are either immune or not as harshly affected by the virus, though exceptions have been seen.

The virus attacks the brain of its host, the unsuspecting female, and begins to reproduce in the brain. Due to the already seemingly large amount of space shapely butt and legs. I can't complain. Guys, on the other hand, have no reason squeezing into size microscopic pants. Do people want to see every contour of their posterior or unmentionables? No. Do skinny jeans actually serve a purpose then?

I can think of one, and it starts with "junk" and ends with "crusher." Judging by how tight these pants are, you have to wonder why any guy would ever put himself through so much misery. I don't want to brag, but I can't see my bits fitting in there and making it out alive. Which leads me to wonder: are guys who wear skinny jeans not very gifted?

I've asked numerous wearers of these dreaded pants how much they're in pain at the end of the day, and I've never gotten a solid answer. They usually just dodge the subject by talking about their hipster hobbies or about their favorite brand of skater shoes. Classic denial. None have explained the benefits of wearing constrictor bottoms, nor have they outright told me they don't cause impotence and other ailments. Therefore, my only option is to conclude that those who wear these abominations don't have a whole lot to pack in.

It's not just beanpole guys who wear them either. I've seen overweight hipster musicians wearing them too, which was an especially horrid sight. This only strengthens my theory, since it shows that men of all shapes and sizes wear skinny jeans. And since men of all shapes and sizes have various sizes of... well, it makes sense that those on the shorter end would migrate towards tighter fitting slacks.

Guys with normal sized equipment can't wear skinny jeans, so they stick with regular loose jeans. And those special men who sport trophy-winning apparatuses get to wear Duluth Trading Company's "Ballroom Jeans," which have a built in crotch gusset which prevents pinching of what matters most. Look it up!

in the head suffered by most females inhabiting the Orange and Los Angeles county area, the host usually does not suspect a thing until it is too late, when the virus mass is 1/2 of the brain's size, and goes rampant on the remaining grey matter.

Luckily symptoms of the virus are easy to see. The first is having a Coach Purse. If one has one, it's 50% likely they will contract or already have the virus. Next the virus enters the blood stream and heads to the brain, where it attacks the common sense, math skills, and linguistic stupidity, inability to do basic math, and the dialect of English called 'Like-Um' dialect. If someone you know or love 'Speaks, um, kinda like, this, um like... with all the like um, likes, and um... ums, and stuff, then they're like, probably like infected... like.'

Scientists were baffled at how a virus could have existed so long in the fabric of the bags without being recognized or taken care of. "Well the interesting thing about this, is it usually infects the mind of what we call a trophy wife... you know, the not so intelligent, got her

MRS degree by investing a couple thousand in a boob job? Yeah those kind of wives. Often times it seems the husband just doesn't listen to her talk enough, so he never notices, until it's too late, and the virus has taken over her body."

The CDC has advised that anyone using, having, wearing, or are around coach purses, be tested for Valley-Girl Syndrome immediately. The side effects can be fatal if the virus takes full control of your brain. If you've been affected by VGS, then you should call your lawyer immediately about how to sign up for the lawsuit, you may be entitled to a bunch of money, and possibly your intelligence back. If you, like, had any. 🧠
