Irish Bailout Set by EU

By Liz Fujita ~ Daily Bull

The European Union announced late Sunday afternoon that it has devised a bailout plan for the floundering Emerald Isle. Ireland has recently been falling deeper and deeper in debt, with area leprechauns moving to other nations in order to fulfill their annual beer-drinking quotas. The EU has promised that rather than billions of Euros – which it feels will be wasted on the failing nation – they will be shipping cargo trucks filled with every beer ever made.

There are members of the international community who feel that Irelands recent descent into the economic maelstrom has been caused partly due to the dwindling interest in St. Patrick's Day as an actual holiday. "In the past," Patty O'Riley explained, "I would go around wearing green and feeling all proud of my potatoey heritage." Nowadays, the Irishman stays home on St. Patrick's Day while college students all around him get plastered on what he calls "wheat piss."

A representative from the EU explained to the Daily Bull, "The problem is that there are too many shamrocks over there, and not enough demand for St. Patty's Day paraphernalia. Everyone just wants to drink, whether they're Irish or not, and wear green. No one cares about pots of gold and shamrocks and little men with funny shoes."

They just need a lot of beer, and Irish Lassies dressed up like this to hand it out. Everyone's happy! Except maybe feminists, but they are never happy...

A recent poll of college students in the United Kingdom showed that 95% wore 'Kiss Me I'm Irish' tshirts in mid March, whether they were or not. That number rose to almost 100% when students in the United States took the survey.

Shipping gallons of beer to Ireland, the EU said, will hopefully bring up the national mood enough to get people spending again. "They're just depressed," muttered England's PM Cameron. "If we get the whole country drinking more, being merry, and appreciating their own holiday the way the rest of the world does, I'm sure people would go out and start boosting the economy again."

Will the plan work? A small sampling tested on residents of depressed areas of America showed some hope. Jennifer Granholm explained the moderate success was found in areas like Detroit and Flint; the drunks took to the street, smashed a bunch of things, then had to pay for new ones. It's brilliant.

I mean, just look at Michigan State. Their riots, while 'costly' to the city, do cause a lot of people to spend money replacing things. Now thats economic stimulus we can drink! ☺
