HDMZ

By Frank McGuire ~ Daily Bull

Walker has declared! They will not take part in any violence that may arise. They do not care what the crisis is: winter carnival riots, general riots over having to pay tuition (it already happened in Britain...), broomball riots, CS takeovers, zombies, whatever horror you can conjure up in you poorly light, over (or under) heated college living hole.... The new HDMZ in Walker will not be the place for everyone to wait it out in peace.

They may call it the 'Humanities Digital Media Zone', but the all-knowing bullhead.gif knows better than that. Bullhead.gif told us that if we want to hide away in 'safety' then we should have access to the Houghton De-Militarized Zone (HDMZ) so we can attempt to make it though the next revolution. The HDMZ is equipped with all kinds of fancy toys that will make the impending doom that is just outside the zone a little more enjoyable.

Lumberjacking it

By Jeremy "Mr. Sunshine" Loucks ~ Daily Bull

As some of you may know, I dabble part-time as a lumberjack. Cutting and splitting wood is a tough and dangerous occupation with many stringent requirements, some of which would scare the faint of heart.

You Must Like Pancakes

This is not an option. You have to enjoy pancakes in all shapes, sizes, and varieties. And not by themselves either. Piled high with some eggs and bacon, and completely smothered with Vermont Maple Syrup. That's right kiddies, Vermont, the land of maple syrup and some other things that history might remember, such as a big rock that looks like a face...or is that New Hampshire? Anyways, only Vermont syrup, not that pretend stuff they make in Michigan or other especially that fake junk you can buy in the supermarket. Mrs. Butterworth? Ha! More like Mrs. Fakerworth.

Nice Axe! (say that ten times fast)

You must wear flannel at all times that you are participating in being a lumberjack

Flannel has proven not only to make you look the most manly while cutting down defenseless trees, it's also tougher than Kevlar in deflecting falling wood and preventing

China Builds American Cars; Parts from America, Sources Say

By Jon "Big-O" Mahan ~ Daily Bull ~

BEIJING, CHINA- The Chinese government announced today that it was ready to take on the US in the car making industry. The Chinese, who have stayed mostly out of the American car market, have decided to step up their game. The Chinese are going to put out many American style cars for express sale in America.

"Well, what we're doing is basically taking the same shitty American cars that everyone is used to driving in America, and then having it assembled by Chinese people, thus eliminating their seeming grudge about losing American jobs to cheap chinese manufacturing, and then selling it to them for crazy low prices."

Consumer reports of the cars already look promising for the Chinese. "Wow, it feels just as crappy as my own real ford! I can barely tell the difference!" Said a Sally Fortwright of Flint, Michigan. "You mean you're telling me that this isn't a crappy Government Motors car that Obama bailed out?"

"Wow, it actually feels like an improvement!" said one Dan Misnhap of Detroit.

Varying consumer reports have called for copyright, or patent infringing on the part of the Chinese, however, the US has denied that 'crappy quality' and 'terrible gas mileage' as well as 'looking like crap' are not things one can patent. They are however, something that a company can strive for should they find it appropriate.

The auto workers unions are already rioting in the street, crying outrage at the Chinese intrusion into their market. The workers seem to be asking for yet another bail out to help GM and Ford, among other car companies, begin make higher quality cars.

"Ford? High quality? Dont make me laugh! We Chinese know quality, or atleast lack of it, and ford has no quality. Maybe if they had the income of all of China, maybe." said the head of the Chinese government.

In either case, this coming year should prove to be an interesting one for car makers across the country. With the chinese entering the market, there's a new competitor for cheap, crappy cars. Luckily, they can never claim one thing, They can never claim to be MADE IN AMERICA (even though a large number of american cars are made over seas, and a large number of foreign cars are made here.)

Nothing says 'Ford' or 'American' or 'Quality' like the Pinto!

... 38th Parallel from front

Cameras can be had to document the doom of anything from your favorite broomball team, to MTU itself, to the entire world. Then there are those nifty full color printers to get your end-of-the-world pictures printed out for future generations to discover in the ashes that was once a peaceful place. There are tons of big screens to watch your favorite cartoons as the city burns, or you can sit at one of the multiple computers and work with wicked software designed to make those documentaries look like a million bucks (or maybe just 800 but close enough when tomorrow may never come...).

Mac and Windows are allowed to sit peacefully together in the new HDMZ, showing that there are no lines that cannot be overcome while locked away in the Houghton De-Militarized Zone... Now to finish that paper before they send out their super spy drones to 'harvest the information'...

splinters. Besides, it makes excellent camouflage when hiding from those protesting hippy bastards that want to "save the trees, man."

Bear-Wrestling

One must be proficient at bear-wrestling, as it is the preferred pastime of lumberjacks around the world. This tradition began during an especially harsh winter, where the lumberjacks had to wrestle the bears in a life-and-death struggle for food, with the lumberjacks emerging victorious. When you see people wrestling imaginary bears, know that they are truly just unemployed lumberjacks reliving their greatest battles.

The Beard

Legendary facial hair is another aspect of being a woodsman. No self-respecting lumberjack ever allows his beard to be less than 3/4 inches long, and those who shave are not only shunned, they are fired. A few actors and sports figures are seen with pretty impressive facial hair, but they're actually just incredibly successful lumberjacks. Gerard Butler and Chuck Norris are lumberjacks; slaying acres of forest prepared them for jobs slaying thousands of villains on the silver screen.

Tools of the Trade

A lumberjack has many tools at his disposal. His axe, his saw, his can of snuff, his beard, his wits, his bulging biceps, his speed, his axe, his flannel, his...you get the picture. If you're not a chew guy, it's ok, they make beef jerky that comes in chew cans. Mmmm jerky. Just like chew, except meatier... and not tobacco.

Wearing Women's Clothing

Lumberjacking is not like Brokeback Mountain. Also, Screw you Monty Python.
