Prof. Disappears After 'Unfair' Exam

By Olivia Zajac ~ Daily Bull

Over the course of the weekend it seems that one of Michigan Tech's professors has gone missing. Professor Maulings, hailing from the chemical engineering department, was last seen issuing an exam to his Thermodynamics class Friday afternoon. "I remember shooting him dirty looks for talking about how small the room was to be giving an exam for about 10 minutes into the hour," one student, who wishes to remain anonymous, reports. "I think he mentioned something about his stupid undergrad degree from MIT again, while he was at it."

After having suffered through the exam and listening to everyone mutter and bitch about having not finished one of the three problems on said exam, there seemed to be a shift in the attitude of the majority of ... see Bad Chemistry on back

Presidents' Day!?!

By Alec Hamer ~ Daily Bull

Now, don't get me wrong... I love Presidents' Day. I mean, what with all the mail not being sent and banks not being open, it's the best! But why do we celebrate it every year? Well I did some personal research and discovered the shocking truth.

Considering he only wore his uniform twice ever, what was the point of President's Day?

Zachary Taylor, a little-known president, invented it in 1851 after leaving office. But why? Not sure. I think that after leaving office he realized "what the fuck did I do?" so he made the holiday and said, "Sweet, now everyone will forever know the name Zachary Taylor." I'm not sure how he intended it to be celebrated but I have a few ideas.

Presidents' Day was actually intended to be President's Day.* It would be a day for the president. I would start with everyone waking up early to prepare the president breakfast in bed. Then, while he was eating in bed everyone would ask him what he wanted to do that day, since it is his day. He would probably reply "sleep" and everyone would be let down.

the class. A malevolent feeling filled the ChemSci. Something much cooler than the smoke monster from Lost was seen swarming through the hallways, as students ran in terror. It was screaming and raging about Carnot engines and 'that stupid fucking graph', and seemed to want revenge. Most professors were seen fleeing the building as well, and since it happened on a Friday no one was overly concerned about taking a head count and just got started on their weekend.

Of course it is possible that he just wandered off into the frozed tundra of Houghton. Afterall, it's hard enough to see...

Reports are that Maulings did not show up to class on Monday, or turn up on campus at all. "We tried calling him like, twice, and he didn't answer, so we just stopped trying. We lose a lot of professors that way," the University informed a Daily Bull correspondent.

After an inside contact dug up some information on Maulings, it turns out he's not even certified to be teaching at such a prestigious University as Michigan Tech. "We did a little research into his background, and found out that he never even went to MIT like he claims. We called their records office and asked about him, and nothing came up under his name. We looked then into his other degrees... and nothing checks out. So, Maulings apparently just wandered in off the streets one day, probably due to the fact that it was cold out, and just started teaching."

Well. That explains a lot. Only a professor who has never taught before, nor taken classes before, would ever, EVER give an exam in 50 minutes that actually requires a minimum of 90 minutes. That would just be a terrible, terrible thing to do to students.

Maulings' whereabouts are still unknown, and the only suspects are the students in his thermo class. No one dares question them for fear, if they did, in fact, do bodily harm to this 'professor', they might strike out at whoever inquired. The University, when faced with replacing him, simply said "We'll wait for the next guy off the street to wander in. Should be good enough."

Eventually, the president would stumble down stairs, robe on, and slump in his chair in the oval office. It is then that everyone would ask again what he wanted to do to which he would respond "Can't I just have two goddamn minutes!?! Jesus-fucking-Christ!" Then, when dinner is prepared, the president would sit down, see the plate and promptly push it away with a big, whiny NO! and cross his arms.

Now, this probably is not true so I offer another theory. Presidents' Day is actually intended for senators, but seeing as Zachary was in the executive branch this simply would not do! So, seizing the opportunity he decided to deny the senators their day. It also could have meant to be Residents' Day - as in, a day for all the residents of America.

Personally I think Presidents' Day is the one day a year he can just fuck around. You know, play some Xbox, drink some brew and read old Playboys for "the articles." Pretty much just live a normal life one day a year.

Whatever Presidents' Day is about, enj—ah, fuck it. 🐮

I wonder if this keyboard has any sticky keys... those really suck! Or maybe are delicious.
