Man has 39 Wives, Women's Rights Activists Shocked.

By Big O ~ Daily Bull

SOMEWHERE, INDIA- Somewhere in the Indian state of Guwahati, is a man that is 66, has 39 wives, 94 children, and 33 grand children. The man has defended himself by saying that he loves everyone of them, and he is blessed to have so many people to care for. The family works the house, with the daughters cleaning, the sons working in the fields with the animals, and the wives cooking in the kitchen. All of them live in a large home near the India, Myanmar, and Bangladesh border.

However, women's rights activists aren't having anything with him. They are outraged at his supposed mistreating of his wives and daughters.

"It's outrageous. He has 39 wives. How can one man possibly give them all the love and compassion they need as people, and as women?"

Did you Know?

By John Earnest ~ Daily Bull

The saliva of a Komodo Dragon is teeming with dozens of strains of pathogenic, commensal bacteria. Their teeth have grooves which inject this "venom" into prey with every bite. Animals unfortunate enough get gnawed upon in this fashion will rapidly expire from shock,

If sharks manufacture piss with their skin, how is this poor kiddo ever to be potty trained? Dressing him up like a shark will just confuse him... gross.

sepsis and blood loss due to localized disruption of clotting.

Sharks do not possess conventional kidneys. Rather, their skin acts as a semi-permeable membrane for extracting urea from their bloodstream. [Editor's Query: Wait, so a shark that's sweating to the 80s could actually just be going crazy and pissing its pants?]

In most mammals (including humans), the inferior laryngeal nerve makes a loop from the brain down through the chest before returning to the larynx. In giraffes, this indirect route extends the nerve by 15 feet.

The shell of a cone snail contains a complex pattern of triangular shapes, identical to those produced by a rule-30 cellular automaton. The rule-110 automaton, of equivalent complexity, is capable of performing universal computation as proved by Matthew Cook.

The Portuguese man-of-war may appear to be a jellyfish, but is in fact a colony of four distinct interdependent organisms with specialized functions. The animal is also fairly unique among relatives in that it exhibits bilateral, rather than radial, body symmetry.

The extremophilic bacterium Deino-coccus Radiodurans (literally, "radiation-surviving terrible grain") can withstand over 3000 times the lethal dose of ionizing radiation for humans. Some hypothesize the organism's sophisticated DNA repair mechanisms evolved to combat damage from repeated dehydration. ☹

...99 Problems from front

The man has defended his actions by stating that he loves them all equally, usually 7-8 at a time.

"I love the company, and I'd love to have more wives and children. I'd be willing to do a lot to marry more," he claimed. The man even once went through the trouble of marrying 10 women in a single year.

The family eats a METRIC FUCKTON of rice everyday to support itself and a OMG WHAT THE FUCK amount of potatoes as well, living completely off of their own OMG WE HAVE FOOD supplies they get from farming and agriculture, as well as donations

The man is part of a Christian sect which allows polygamy, and beleives it will rule the world eventually. This of course, draws ire from fellow Christian sects.

Women's rights activists, however, are still unhappy with the way things are.

"If he doesn't change his behavior, we believe we might have to go in there and change it ourselves. We'll free those women from the slavery he's putting them into, and teach him a lesson in Feminism."

Normal people, on the other hand, are just shrugging.

"Meh, good for him. Living the dream eh?" said one Joseph of Whittier, California

"As long as they're all happy I suppose it's okay..." said a Sally of Wisconsin, before returning to her protests of Scott Walker.

More on this strange and fascinating story later. Perhaps he'll have another wife by then.
