F^%# English

By Jodhbir Singh ~ Daily Bull

English is a fucking language. I know you don't agree with me. I didn't agree with myself too. But now I am convinced that it is the fuckiest language in the world. Oops, I just used an wrong English adjective. Oh no! Another mistake with an article. Not this article, but the 'a, an, and the' article. See how confusing it is for someone whose fourth language is English?

Another problem is close resemblances of some words in pronunciation but different in meaning. Ask any Indian or an international student to say beach and bitch in a same sentence. I am sure you will find a bitch jumbling in a beach. An American may not even think about it, but it is as difficult to pronounce for me as it is for an American to differentiate between Jodhbir and John with beer.

There are two Englishmen I hate most in my life- Wren and Martin. Both of them were losers, because they wrote a grammar book for high school ... see English on back

Fly like a Cheesehead

By Bill Melcher ~ Daily Bull

In 2010, the US Census Bureau ran a special study in the state of Wisconsin. The goal of this study was to find out why, in fact, people live there. Wisconsin, referred to commonly as "where everywhere is nowhere," protested the motives of the Census's study but was secretly eager to see the results. When they were finally published, the results were unique but not surprising. It was found that there are only three reasons Wisconsinites don't pack their things and go.

Only crazies live in Wisconsin. LOOK AT THAT BRA

First and foremost, football. The Packers are the only team in the NFL owned in part by the fans. If football fans needed ANOTHER reason to paint themselves and tailgate, this is it. "We just bought part of the team, so if they win, we win too! RAAAAGGHAGHGHH!!!!" one extremely dedicated Packers fan said in Dallas last month before opening and finishing a Coors Light (hey, he's from Wisconsin) in 8 seconds. Indeed, if there's one thing the "Forward" state does have, it's football. In fact, the Packers' victory at Super Bowl XLV led to the first increase in the state's population since 1988.

Second on the list is cheese. Who doesn't like cheese? Got a long road trip, don't want to make a rest stop? Eat string cheese for lunch, dinner, and breakfast before the ... see Dangerously Cheesy on back students to make their life miserable in India. You can see it from my damn good English. Interestingly, every chapter in the book has more exceptions than rules. I wasn't sure if their book was in favor of English or against it.

Then one day, a bunch of guys like me who weren't sure about what they were actually saying- bitch or beach- decided to start a group to address their problems with the language. They called it Fuck The English (FTE) group. The mission of the group is to give liberty to individuals whose first language is not English to use the English language without any boundaries of grammar. Instead, we just needed to understand the context of the talk rather than its correctness. For example, a bitch playing with guys on a beach would sound the same as a beach with guys playing on a bitch. With 'bitch', I do not refer to any women. I have full respect for those ones.

However, in America, 'Bitch' is a common word to describe a woman who shares certain characteristics with some animal. In this spring break, I met a friend after a long time who was taking a walk with her 'bitch.' Being not sure of the sex of the pet, I refer to it as 'it' and asked her its name. She said she (bitch) is Dolly. Well, that sounded familiar. But I found she gave a lot more respect to Dolly by not referring to her a bitch as a common noun.

In the English language, you need to understand the context of the talk. One thing I struggled to understand in my 3rd grade was the lack of any explanation why 'cut' is not pronounced on the same principle as 'put' is. Isn't it weird? In 6th grade when I first learnt the word 'weird,' I found it so strange. Anyways, all this shit that we are talking about English makes it one of the best languages in the world. Don't believe me? Try swearing at your best friend in English, and see how relaxed you and she feel.

trip. Planning a dinner party, but don't want guests to eat all the appetizers? Cover them in ... actually, I'd eat them all if they were covered in cheese. Delicious cheese... I'd gorge myself and then be unable to eat the main course. Cheese is excellent, who are we kidding... and it's the second biggest reason why Wisconsin has a population.

Third ... this is a bit confusing. Bad schools. Apparently, Wisconsinites have devalued education enough to the point where they pride themselves in having a lower standard. Interestingly, they view it as not subpar, but unique. Wisconsin residents often don't leave because they are under the impression a Wisconsin education is one-of-a-kind (and it certainly is). Others venture out to places like Mississippi, West Virginia, or Michigan State for higher education. "I went to Tech for a while, but I had to transfer to Northern because the academic climate was more what I was used to from home," said Troy Cogan, a current NMU student from Wisconsin.

Still, we salute him for getting out of his home state.

This study was so eye-opening that the Census Bureau has planned a similar one for the next census.

Motives for living in Wisconsin have been uncovered, who knows what we will see next? For example, I've often wondered why people choose to live in Iowa. There's literally nothing there but potatoes. Maybe you like potatoes, maybe you're Irish and like to remember your roots (pun pun pun). I don't know, there must be a reason, which we will eventually uncover. However, there's a much more pressing matter at hand, which brings us to the Census's next local resident motive analysis. Hopefully there are still people left there for them to study in 2020 ... look out, Detroit.

United Airlines Grounds All Flights for a Raindrop.

By Jon 'Big-O' Mahan ~ Daily Bull

United Airlines recently grounded all of their flights out of the Chicago hub in Illinois. Many people were outraged at the reason why. A single raindrop had been spotted on the windshield of an aircraft.

"It may not look like much, but that single drop of rain could have been catastrophic. Imagine if our pilots had begun to fly, and been blinded by the rain, or the clouds. There would be mass chaos," said a United Representative

Over 700 flights were cancelled that day due to fears that the planes might run into each other, or not be able to take off because of the slight possibility that there would be rain, and even slighter that the rain would be heavy.

"We're not willing to risk the lives of our customers just for no reason at all. We want to make sure that every single one of our customers is safe and sound, and can fly easy and in total comfort knowing that we have their back. Of course, because the cancellations were due to circumstances beyond our control, United holds no responsibility for purchasing new tickets or housing the people up in hotels for the nights that they are stuck here." The United representative added, "However, we do have $1 coupons for anyone staying at the various hotels in the area."

This has not quelled rioters, as they have taken to the streets in adamant protest of United. More on this as it develops.

Karmen Vrooman – Greek Student of the Month

February 2011

Karmen is a great role model and a great promoter of Greek Life here at Michigan Tech. She has helped the Alpha Gamma Delta chapter grow and develop in just the short time she has been President, as well as opening up Panhel to new ideas for Formal Recruitment. In the community, Karmen has also participated in many service projects through Alpha Gamma Delta, and enjoys volunteering throughout the Houghton community and on campus.

GREEK STUDENT OF THE MONTH IS SPONSORED BY PANHELLENIC COUNCIL. YAY AND STUFF.
