How High is Too High to Drive?

By Kyle Roe ~ Daily Bull

The surge of recreational marijuana use in Michigan has started another debate in Legislature: What constitutes driving while high? Law makers are considering setting a driving under the influence blood-content and mental state threshold for illegal marijuana. Under the proposed law, drivers who test positive for 5 nanograms of THC, the super-fun, adventure-causing ingredient in marijuana, would be considered too blazed to drive. But this is not all a bad thing; one of the bill's sponsors is trying to assure pot heads that they're not going to be stopped if they are driving appropriately. "There are many ways to drive legally baked and not get noticed by any enforcers of the law," stated the unnamed sponsor, "for example: if you plan to clam bake your car, one way to do this unnoticed is to use tinted windows. And I suggest you hardwire a pipe system that pumps the excess fumes

Daily Bull Scandal Revealed: Editor is a Bad Person, Too!

By Zil Atijuf – foreign correspondent

WEST LANSING, MI – In a shocking turn of events this past weekend, it was revealed to a group of at least 14 people that the Editor In Chief of Michigan Tech University's prolific satire publication, the Daily Bull, is a terrible person. The breaking news was announced recently following an unrelated scandal in which the publication was accused of being 'mean and stuff.' Fortunately, the naysayers can rest easily knowing that this correspondent has dug up the true dirt on the EIC, gotten first-hand witness testimony, and is bringing this stark, cold fact to you, the readers.

For starters, the Bull's editor is not 100% American. Shockingly, she speaks English fairly well, and has even conned her way into a job in the Writing Goods Center. "I have no idea how she earned a position there," noted one STC major. "Her use of semicolons would offend even the most remedial grammarian. AND," the source dropped their voice, "I hear she once typoed 'then' when she meant 'than.' Disgraceful."

This is a horse. They are a terrible person. Just like our editor.

PCS). "It would be so hypocritical to pick on business and CS majors but not their own (and you won't believe this) math and social sciences major!" Clearly, the Daily Bull's boss is mentally unstable. In fact, it's highly likely that she escaped from an insane asylum and just started taking classes here. It's the only explanation.

In a related strand, it was brought to our attention that this alleged "math-

Next on the list of heinous offenses is that the EIC is allegedly not even an engineering major. "No wonder the Bull never picks on her," commented a representative from the Office of Fairness and PC Stuff (OF-emacian" (note the use of sarcasm quotes) once received a C in differential equations. "What the fuck kind of math major is she?" queried one far-better student. "I bet no engineer ever performed exactly average in a class. BLASPHEMY. She should clearly change majors." Although the EIC has owned up to the grade, explaining a lack of preparation for the teaching methods and never studying, we feel it's obvious what this really means: the Bull's boss is a hardcore crack addict that was put into a witness protection program at Tech.

Other flaws we have discovered in this Editor In Chief include: her proclaimed dislike for bacon (clearly making her some kind of vegan demon), a penchant for cats (which we assume to be a hostile takeover plot), that she once got a 44% on an exam (so she must be really dumb), and a photograph of her kissing a young man with orange hair (OMG OBVIOUSLY A REBELLIOUS TRAMP).

The Daily Bull is working hard to cover this scandal. An inside source, one Mr. "Sunshine" has alleged that they fear news of this outrageous radical leader spreading across campus. "She's a force to be reckoned with, this Editor we have. I think it's obvious that because she is flawed, we think she's a wretch of a human being. Let's just say that we'll be keeping this crazy lady's crazy secrets..." Sunshine paused.

out your exhaust, so the smoke will be indistinguishable from your cars emissions." The sponsor then introduced us to his dog and his painted van. He assured us that the technique always worked for his "gang" and the only time he experienced problems with the exhaust pipe system was when a motorcyclist drove behind them.

While it is already illegal to drive if you are "uber" impaired by drugs, states have taken different approaches to this issue. Twelve states, including Arizona, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Rhode Island, have had a zero-tolerance policy for driving in the presence of your good old friend Marry - so Nick Sanders, policy specialist for the National Marry Jane Appreciation Society, had told us. Of course he had not said those exact words. When he named off the states he had actually said "that Ice Tea place, Cheese Hats, Iowa Potatoes, and the island with only one road which is actually not that long seeing that the island is not even an island but a small state." Minnesota holds a similar policy, but exempts marijuana. Minnesota is famous for being one of two states that do not believe marijuana has any impairing effects on the people who use it. The other state, California, lives by the belief that they have evolved to a point of being immune to the effects of pot. This is most likely because of the fact that their cities pollution is 76% THC and their water is three ppm (parts per million) coke, and two ppm heroin.

In preparation for the impending bill, officers are learning new techniques to test if a driver is too high to drive. Because how baked a person is cannot be judged by a breathalyzer test, and the officers do not have time to test blood, the officers performing the arrest will have to use their better judgment and follow some basic rules. These rules include asking the driver simple and relevant questions like; what color is the truck that the officer is driving, which way does gravity go if you are upside down, and "you high bro?" Unquestioned arrests will take place if the driver's car is painted like the Mystery Machine or the driver's car is non-existent.

The bill will be finalized in the next month, so drivers should take into consideration before driving under the influence of illegal substances, as it will soon be illegal to drive while blazed. In lighter news over one hundred and seventeen teenagers died last month due to texting related accidents. This is on top of the over two thousand arrests for texting while driving, including the mass arrest of the entire Cristal Springs Highschool in Kent County Michigan. We at the Daily Bull hope you take one thing out of this report: don't do stupid shit while driving. And if you do, expect crazy shit to go down, because that's what you deserve for doing the stupid shit in the first place.
