What They're Fighting For In...

Brought to you by Nathan Invincible Miller

It's another installment of my soon to be incredibly long series detailing all the untold revolutions taking place around the world! You've heard about Libya and Egypt, but what about the hidden struggles of their fellow men? Part 3 of "What They're Fighting For In..." starts now!

Cuba! After decades of communism, the island nation is finally bowing to economic pressures to shift to a market system. Many industries are being privatized for the first time in generations to reduce the government's debt load, a prospect that has upset many loyal workers across the nation.

"I put in 45 years of service for the Communist regime, and the last thing I wanted was for it to quit and go back to a free market system," complained a former public taxi driver. "Now they tell me they can't afford to pay me and I get to ...see RAGIN CAJUNS on back

FOR SALE: Old Thing Found In Garage ($25 o.b.o.)

ATLANTA, GA – Community member and loving grandmother Eustace Barnum wishes to sell a historically relevant device she found in her garage last Saturday. Says Barnum, "Well, I just don't know what exactly this does, but I'm sure that there's a nice young person out there who would make good use of it. My grandson is so very good with technology..." The item for sale is reported to have several smooth surfaces, a crank, three gears, a light green paint, and is probably from about 1920. Interested parties should contact Barnum at 1-801-200-3377.

Only 25 dollars? Hot damn Gramma!

MISSING: Area Author Stunned, Lost Four Words

SAN FRANCISCO, CA – From beneath his jaunty beanie hat and peering out from behind thick-rimmed barely-prescription strength glasses, SanFran resident Sebastian Montblanc explained to us that someone has stolen words from him. "I was just sitting at Starbucks with my iPad, writing up the next semi-bestselling – but not wildly popular – teen fiction novel, when all of a sudden someone took from me the most beautiful prose phrase from the last chapter!" Montblanc explained that not much was taken and that he will most likely not press charges, but would still appreciate the return of his punchline before it "leaks to the internet and is no longer an obscure inside joke among fans."

WANTED: Local Grade Slasher ($1,500 reward)

HOUGHTON, MI – Police in the small town of Houghton, MI have reported that a grade-slashing criminal is on the loose. The felon has reportedly stabbed at least 270 students right in their visceral GPA organs. Although reports are still filing in about the nature and whereabouts of the criminal, most suspect that he is armed

ACLU: Trix Rabbit Case Resolved

UTAH – After years of discrimination forced the Trix rabbit into hiding in the Utah desert, the American Civil Liberties Union has finally managed to work out a deal with Trix that gets their mascot at least one free bowl of the cereal per commercial shooting. "Trix are for kids," he scoffed. "That's ageist and speciesist!" The ACLU declined comment, but did indicate that they will also be going to work with the Geico Gecko, who recently revealed that he does not receive any discounts at all on his Thankfully the court case was solved before and incident like this could occur. Think of the children.

REVIEW: Blockbuster movie stars Michael Cera, Angelina Jolie, and Samuel L. Jackson (/5)

The first blockbuster of the summer will debut soon in select theatres nationwide. Although Paramount Pictures is leery to disclose too many details regarding plot, it has been unveiled that Cera, Jolie, and Jackson are the stars of the show. Cera will depict an awkward 20-something who falls madly in love with the smoldering-sexy Jolie. Jolie, however, has a secret - one that requires her to wear tight clothing and wield guns. Jackson's role, though brief, is centered around being a badass and saving the day for Jolie and her young, gangly lover. Rumors are also circulating that Orlando Bloom will make a brief cameo as Jolie's former cute-but-wounded boyfriend. Coming soon to theatres, May 29. 🐰 pay over $18 billion to affected parties around the Amazon who were exposed to toxic sludge from drilling activities. Chevron obviously called BS, but surprisingly many of the peasants standing to gain also expressed concern at the ruling.

"We are but simple farmers, what do we need with $100 million in compensation?" said one village elder in regard to the sum awarded to his community. "We could try and lure in nano-tech investment or build ice cream shops, but I fear we will simply become fat and corrupt like the rest of the Western world." However, other plaintiffs are appealing for a larger reward, citing the inability to pave their streets with gold.

Bangladesh! 1 student was killed at a protest this past week to fight a move by the government to enact equal inheritance laws for women. The move is sparking marches and demonstrations nationwide by men who are sick and tired of women thinking they deserve equal rights blah blah blah. Said one enraged protester, "Women are only good for two things: baking and babies. They deserve nothing! I am man and have been granted with superiority!" Etc etc.

Unfortunately, this also is a true story. It's getting harder and harder to figure out what is real and what is bogus these days. Next thing you know, they'll start arguing over how to count to ten or which color skittle is the best. 🍬

ADD Weather

By Olivia Zajac ~ Daily Bull

Everyone has noticed the awesomely crap weather we've had lately. It's as if Mother Nature is PMSing and taking it all out on Houghton. It goes from being sunny and in the high 50s down to the 20s and snowing heavy, nasty, not fun wet snow. Nobody is a fan of not fun wet snow. And then it warms up a bit, snows again, and warms up again with massive winds all in the course of a few hours. This just seems too strange to be natural. As it turns out, it's not natural. Not in the slightest.

A local dog suffers weather-induced dementia.

One group of seniors, for their design project, has been contracted by the government to create a machine or method in which they could control the weather, for use in war zones. The students have successfully created such a device with the help of various professors on campus. The whole deal has been very hush-hush, but rumor has it that these unnamed students have just made so much bank of their design that they no longer actually have to get real jobs after graduation. How is this? "We managed to patent the idea before the government had a chance. And we have that patent till we're all good and dead. And any slight variations to it, as well. Basically, we own the idea and the marketplace for it."

The reason the weather has been so wonky around here lately? "Well, we had to test it somewhere, and there aren't too many people in the area... we sort of figured everyone would be so stressed because it's week 12 and all that they just wouldn't notice. Oops."

What does the University have to say about this? According to a recent survey, morale of the students fluctuates with the weather; the worse the weather, the lower everyone's spirits sink. In good news, however, the crappy weather has been keeping students indoors, which has been increasing amount of time spent studying and doing homework. Statistically, if the weather keeps on being a bitch, we should all do fantastically on our finals, with an 87% chance of passing everything with at least a CD, 60% chance of all Bs, and a shot in hell at getting that elusive 4.0 you all have been chasing in your dreams since you started here.

So thank you, mysterious group of seniors, for really just wanting everyone to do super fantastic through these last few weeks. "In reality, we just haven't figured out how to actually stop our device from changing the weather so quickly, just yet. We're just kind of hoping it'll stop soon. But shhh! Don't tell the government! We're hoping to charge them even more once we figure out how to fix it!" A smart group of students, indeed. 🐰

Ivory Coast! Haha just kidding, they're actually still fighting about real issues there. Remember the disputed November 2010 election where U.N.-backed Ouattara beat Gbagbo? They're still fighting over it.
