The Green Revolution

Deep in the bowels of the forestry building are secrets that forestry majors do not want you to know about. Within it lies a secret - a deadly secret and I am risking my life reporting to you avid Bull readers. What I am talking about, my dear friends, is the genetic lab work that takes place. They are currently developing trees capable of military combat.

Yes, you read correctly: military combat. The forestry majors are on the cutting edge of flora warfare. I managed to interview one of the original students working on the project who has since denounced the development of this plant warfare. He told me the idea originally came from the same inspiration that gave Isaac Newton the push he needed to formulate the theory of gravity; an apple falling from a tree.

He went on to say that it wasn't anything extraordinary until you thought about how dangerous it would be if you could control

Local Grandfather Simply not Impressed by Granddaughter's Dance Recital

from Ian Smith - Daily Bull

Houghton, MI – Early this morning we were contacted by local man, Thomas Peabody, in regards to Houghton Elementary's recent production of Swan Lake Jr. Strangely enough, the 58 year old found nothing enjoyable about Mrs. Mayweather's first grade class's interpretation of the world famous stage show.

Wanting to hear more, we asked for an interview. "It really was one of the most dreadful things I have ever had the displeasure of sitting through," he responded. "It just felt so contrived. The fake smiles, the unsynchronized dancing and dear God, the acting. I seriously felt like I was watching a show comprised solely of Nicolas Cage and Shia LaBeouf's children. That's how bad we're talking. It was just shoddy all around. A truly terrible show."

Mr. Peabody also told us to get off his lawn. :(

We asked about the reason for his attendance to what everyone assumed would be as bad as he claims. "Well, I was more or less obligated. My granddaughter Becky was in it. She was the white swan. Holy hell, she may have been the worst part. The casting director really fucked up on that one. They could have at least brought in someone with some experience, or you know... talent. A third or fourth grader,

... AWF MAH LAWN! from front for instance! Even a second grader. But a first grader?! That just insane."

Peadbody continued, "Honestly, I left half way through. I went to the box office and demanded my money back. They said they were using the proceeds for 'repairing the playground' or some BS. I didn't buy it. Low-cost production yields high profits. I'm not stupid. I got my money back, and then immediately threw the $3 away. I wanted absolutely nothing to do with it."

When we asked other parents about what they thought of the show, we got polar opposite answers. "Oh dear, my Jeanny was just wonderful! The best show I've ever seen," coupled with, "I'm just so proud of little Tommy here. He tried so hard to make this production as wonderful as it was."

Mr. Peabody refused to comment further and stared angrily for the rest of the interview.

CS Major Actually Gets Girlfriend: Unrelated Story, Hell Freezes Over

by Jon 'Big O' Mahan ~ Daily Bull

With the recent budget cuts by the Daily Bull for my writing and research, I will unfortunately not be able to give 2 whole stories and must write both of them, as one. Oh my. Anyway.

In shocking news, the CS department has finally broken its 32 year dry spell here at tech, as a young freshman managed to nab a girlfriend in the few short weeks since coming here.

"Yeah... It was kinda hard. I had to play cool, but not too cool, because otherwise she'd just go find someone else, y'know? But in the end, it was worth it:" the young freshman, Mac Macowitz said to the Daily Bull. The CS department has never had a girlfriend in recent times, despite it being a rather large department on campus. Most of this is due, by popular opinion, to their lack of hygiene, getting out of the room, playing WoW, or in some, extreme cases, only being able to speak in hexadecimal, decimal, or even binary code to various persons.

"The freshman has lucked out we think. He hasn't had the time to get into his classes and devolve into a code monkey, so, he's still got some social skills. We find the de-evolution most extreme among the older students and among grad students. It remains to be seen what will happen to the student in years to come." Said one expert. When asked about possible rumors of the student transferring to psych, the expert commented "I wouldn't doubt it. More girls there."

In a totally unrelated story, however, the temperature of hell has finally reached such a low temperature, that the fires are burnt out, and the walls are currently icing over with moisture and a health helping of souls. The souls there were mostly from the areas of the world with intense heat.

To confirm the rumors, this reporter went to hell to see what was going on.

I must however report, that the rumors or true. Even the succubi down there are wearing clothes. SUCCUBI. CLOTHES. Fascinating. What possible horrible things will happen with hell now frozen over? For those whom are familiar with Norse mythology, Ragnorak seems a likely possibility. Im secretly waiting for Niffeheim to come to fruition. Bring on the Valkyries!✿

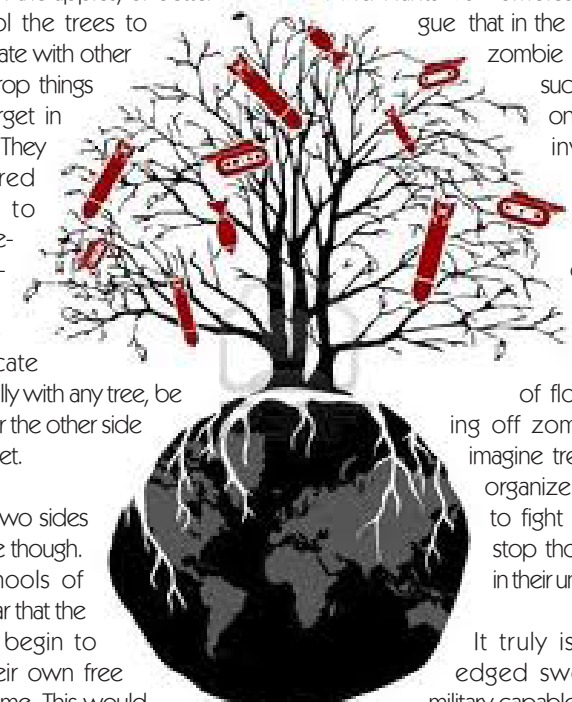

... #008B00 from front the falling of the apples, or better yet control the trees to communicate with other trees to drop things on any target in the world. They have figured out how to use their genetically-engineered trees to communicate telepathically with any tree, be it 20 ft... or the other side of the planet.

There are two sides to this issue though. Some schools of thought fear that the trees will begin to act on their own free will given time. This would be much like Sky Net did in the Terminator series. The thought of sentient trees enslaving mankind does bring a chill down the spine, however there are some who remain a bit more optimistic about the tree situation.

Avid Plants Vs Zombies players argue that in the event of the zombie apocalypse, such tree weaponry would be invaluable to fight back the hordes of the undead. We all know the effectiveness of flora on fighting off zombies. Now imagine trees that can organize themselves to fight they would stop those zombies in their undead tracks.

It truly is a double edged sword. These military capable trees could end up saving or destroying the world. Either way it doesn't matter - the forestry majors are continuing work on their army of trees. We can only hope that the trees will always be on our side, loyally fighting terrorist, zombies, Nazis, and making oxygen. ✿

First, we engineer trees to do what we want. Then we engineer them to make bombs. Then we tell them to drop them. BRILLIANT!

Surprisingly, there's been very little success from these signs. The only success has been from the fact that there are NO WOMEN at engineering schools.
