Local Super Hero Constantly Getting in the way of Daily Bull Project

by Kyle Roe ~ Daily Bull

Amidst his nineteenth lashings this week, hunched-back Daily Bull scientist Salmon the Artistry Major was heard complaining about how a local super hero has been interfering in his work on the 'secret project.' "Empress Vujita has been very disappointed in my lack of progress with the Daily Bull secret weapon, but Her Majesty should not blame poor little Salmon for his sluggishness," whined the feeble, sleepless, bloodshot-eyed worker. "That meddling super hero keeps breaking into my laboratory yelling 'Damn you Vujita! You will terrorize this lovely college no more!' and smashing all my priceless equipment."

One glance into the muddy M.U.B. laboratory, which the drone Salmon was too lazy to clean, proved to show that the Houghton super hero had completely ransacked the Continued Development: Arrested No Longer!

By Doktor Maxwell ~ Guest Writer

If you are any sort of a decent human being with any shred of a soul within you, you like me and many others were probably outraged when Fox decided to cancel Arrested Development so they could keep airing quality programs like "Are You Smarter Than a 5th Grader?" and "So You Think You Can Dance," and if you weren't outraged that's fine as well, the world needs bastards like you.

Bastard or not you probably have seen or heard of the show as The Flying Spaghetti Monster's gift to television, with the show having an all-star cast, continuity between, and dealing with fun subjects like incest, alcoholism, The War on Terror, and bankruptcy; not to mention enough well written jokes and tongue-in-cheek pop culture references to make the people from Rifftrax blush. By the end of the third season with the creators knowing they were being cancelled, seeds were planted that a movie would be made, and rumors were flying around the web that HBO or Showtime may have been looking into picking up the show. And then it all changed a few days back.

On October 2nd a full-cast panel was assembled for the The New Yorker Festival in, where else, New York. Mitchell Hurwitz finally relieved everyone's blueballs (and whatever the female equivalent is) by proclaiming that a 9 or 10 episode season is in the works, place. Scattered across the cold-carpeted floor were important files, iron smelting machinery, and nuclear smarty capsules. But the most surprising damage to the troll's workplace was that its expensive robotic camera was not broken, but chained up and locked away; apparently a joke by the super hero.

So who is this super hero that has been doing Michigan Tech the grand favor of thwarting the Daily Bull and their pitiful henchman's creation of a dastardly weapon of mass devastation?

"D for Diploma!" proudly exclaimed the Super Senior! (tm), the slightly overweight, half snow cow, half albino squirrel, female 6th year undergrad. Only moments into our investigation of the 'mysterious super hero,' Super Senior! (tm) came riding up on her long board, anxious to tell us all about her and her heroic deeds. "I was just a normal half snow cow, half albino squirrel like everyone else; but then a year ago the Evil, Short Tempered, Queen Vujita arrived on campus with her 'League of Bullheads.' I took it upon myself to throw on a ridiculous gold and silver cosplay outfit and jump on my obnoxiously long, long board: forever swearing to defeat Vujita, her super chalk throwing skills of burning rage, and her obedient minions."

"Rumors from the Lode of Important Houghton Super Heroes hint that Her Lowliness Vujita has hatched up the worstest evillest planniest plan of all," Super Senior! (tm) rambled on, "The monstrous Vujita plans to create an Internet phenomenon which will sweep across the campus as the most 'boss student org website ever'."

Interested in following up on this rumor we returned to Daily Bull's secret dungeon, where to our surprise we were confronted by the evil league leader herself, Empress Vujita. "Such rumors are filthy lies spat out by the left winged Lode affiliates looking for a spicy story," Her Highness proclaimed. "Our fine organization has one goal: to bring to the campus happiness and joy. Each and every one of our wonderful staff members is given the highest paycheck, world class health insurance, and three square meals a day. The League of Bullheads- I mean the Daily Bull is the grandest organization on campus. We would never create a super weapon that's soul purpose is to turn Michigan Tech students into comical, Internet browsing, dedicated readers."

Vujita concluded by slamming the dungeon's door in our face, however through its 5-foot thick iron plating we could make out the sound of furious chalk throwing, delegations about a more provocative "PlayBull" magazine, and the lonesome moan of a Daily Bull worker drone as he/she searched through a pile of Bull.

leading up to the movie that has been plaguing everyone's mind for the past 5 years. I'll pause now so you can release a yell of excitement.

Isn't that nice? First off who does the New Yorker think they are having privy to such information, this should have been a nationwide announcement that blocked out every other program on TV - but mind you not during Breaking Bad or Dexter. This reveal would have people partying in the streets overcome with joy. Unfortunately this is week 6 and such things aren't possible at Tech without serious repercussions. Second, the season is supposed to sum up what the family has been up to since the finale as 5 years have passed and I doubt George Michael is still calling himself Mister Manager. Fox hasn't confirmed any of this, but Netflix and Showtime have been reported that they are meeting with Fox about the show. They should have a televised fight to the death over who gets the 4th season, and Fox would probably make killer ratings airing the fight.

One can only dream of the zany hijinks that the Bluth family has been involved in since the series cancellation. Did Oscar upgrade to Web 2.0 and make an "I'm Oscar" Facebook Page? Has Gob perfected a magic and learnt what a chicken actually sounds like? Is Maeby once again a movie producer? Has the Banana Stand become an international business venture? Is Steve Holt! still in high school? Has Tobias Funke become a world famous analrapist? Hopefully all these nagging and questions of the uttermost importance will be answered, along with many, many others. So whether you've seen the series umpteen times or if you haven't, go watch the 53 episodes, it's not like you have anything better to do.
