Big O Inquires - Nicknames

by Jon 'Big O' Mahan
~ Daily Bull

Originally started 1-22-10

Nicknames can be a blessing and a curse. They can be used for good and they can be used for evil. Take, for instance, when a name is used for good. You've got three friends, all named Michael, but with different last names, such as Smith, Doe, and Eggurd-hausen. How do you address one of them but not all of them? Simple. Pick the one that has the hardest last name to say, or one that sounds like the stupidest name to say, and call them Michael, or Mikey.

The others should go by their last name (make sure they know they are being called by their last name, and NOT Mikey) and thus, now your friends' names are Doe, Smith, and Mikey.

Local Restaurant Set Ablaze

By Olivia Zajac ~ Daily Bull

Random Location, US - Local news reports that a chain restaurant, that wishes to remain nameless, has been burnt to the ground by one of their employees. It was evident that it was an inside job from the young woman that was found laughing hysterically outside of the blazing building, flailing empty gas cans about like a mad(wo) man. The manager, who we will refer to as Bubba, had this to say:

"She always seemed like such a good employee. She would come in, do her work, and do it properly. Then I decided that another one of her co-workers deserved more hours than her for no particular reason whatsoever, and she became rather...unnerved when I didn't have a reason. I can't imagine why she would go so far as actually burning the place down. Bitches be crazy."

Well, there goes the food service industry...

The maniac in question is being held by local authorities for further questioning. Once she stopped "that damn creepy cackling", as the late night officer commented, she calmed down enough to make a statement. "I went into work for like, the billionth time this semester. And the schedule that had been posted was redone for the upteenth time. I had almost all of my hours cut outside of a pity shift. Something...snapped in me, I think. Years of working here without complaint and then this. So I figured they were going to fire me, and I decided to fire him first."

A crazed look entered her eye again

Sounds good to me. And now you've solved your problems on how to address them! Unless of course you want to be an ass, and call 'Mikey' (as referred to above) Eggurd-hausen or something. Then you're an ass.

However, with every good story, there is a bad one. It just occurred to me that nicknames based on someone's land of origin, an action, or other vague idea can give other people some sort of lack of knowledge as to who someones real name is. Who is Samurai? What's Mink-Fletcher's real name? Who was Shank, and why was he given that name? I'm not necessarily saying it's a horrible thing, it just can get inconvenient. Take myself for example.

I'm named after a) where I come from and b) an anime, since I'm an otaku. In fact, the name Big-O caught on so well that half of my entire residence hall didn't even know my real name! Most of them had an 'aha!' moment when they finally heard my real name. Of course, for some people, myself included, this could be a good thing. My name is Jon. BORING. But BIG O? Now that's a cool name. Plus, it can start up a conversation.

"Hi! I'm Joe."

"I'm Big O"

"How'd you get that name?"

"Well, have you ever killed a man?" 🐉 as she continued to explain herself, with a bit more venom in her voice with each progressing word. "So I just jammed the oven full of anything flammable that I could find, doused it in all the extra grease and any sort of possible flame accelerant, including some pressurized cans of garlic spray. Oooooohhhh those exploded real nice, and gave the restaurant a nice, pleasant aroma. I made sure that no one was in the building that I actually cared about..."

For fear of their own safety, the insane girl was dragged off to a mental institution, wherein she shall remain until they perform a full lobotomy, and be returned to work at said restaurant after it is rebuilt. The reasoning? "Someone without an actual brain would be the perfect person to work here. No complains, no issues," Bubba commented. "She'll now be the ideal employee!" 🐉
