EA to Release Badminton Video Game

By Alec Hamer ~ Daily Bull

Earlier this month, EA Sports, maker of the ever popular Madden series, announced plans to release a new sports franchise game for the fast paced world of badminton. Although not too popular in the United States, badminton is expected to be an up and coming sport much like arena football. The video game is expected to be one of the most technologically advanced sports games of all time.

Motion capture and advanced 3D rendering are sure to make professional players like Chin Dan, Peter Gade, and Lee Chong Wei household names. "With its fast paced action and smaller, less frightening grunts badminton is sure to go far!" declares one politician adding "We plan to open a badminton dome right here

Four things I Learned in Chengdu

By Steve Whittaker ~ Daily Bull

Last summer I went to Chengdu, China and during that time I learned a few things, both about myself and the people that lived there. Now, I don't feel like sharing the boring life lesson shit, no! I will share with you only the important things. Things you NEED to know.

1. Chinglish shirts are AWE-SOME!!!!

During my time abroad in China I found one of my favorite things to collect was chinglish shirts. Now you might not think it, but they can be really entertaining, especially when you realize that most of the people have no idea what the shirts say. Not only is it entertaining to buy the shirts, but it's also entertaining to see young children or old ladies wearing shirts that, by our standards, would be quite inappropriate. One of my personal favorites that I found and bought depicted a daddy white milk staring angrily at the mommy white milk after seeing the stork drop off a baby chocolate milk.

I think I read a different version in high school...

2. Corporate Symbols are generously abused.

If a company hasn't copyrighted their logo or slogan then it will be used and abused pretty commonly (or so it seemed) to help get customers to flock to businesses thinking it is a foreign brand. I won't say too much more on this as the picture explains it pretty clearly.

So....panda is Chinese for old person?

3. Building Codes?

I found it quite amusing that the power lines in most areas I went to, even some of the nicer areas, were arranged in a way that made me wonder how cities didn't frequently burn to the ground. When half the lines were strung through trees as a means to support them, or witnessing a man leaning a ladder on the power line that he then proceeded to work on. You really start to wonder when the next time you will see someone get fried.

I was eating outside a restaurant when circuit breaker outside a barber shop exploded and caught fire. It was promptly put out via a good whacking with a broom from one of the salon workers; apparently that was a pretty common occurrence.

4. Pandas fur is brown and they hate Noise

They are lazy as fuck on top of that. I saw pandas and unlike the natural geographic photos their fur is brown, mostly from the mud and or shit, they must get pre-picture baths. They are also not fond of noise as this picture will show you. 🐼 in the great state of Missouri!"

Often touted as the fastest of the racquet sports, many can't seem to find any interest. "I mean sure it's an interesting sport and all but the players aren't even hot" remarked one man in his mid 30's with a bald spot and a bulging belly. Although things are looking up for the humble sport which has a big following in many countries overseas, it seems as though badminton may be destined to a similar fate much like American Soccer. With eccentric billionaires looking to bankroll new hobbies, expect a franchise in a major metropolis near you soon.

OMG A CONTEST WHAAT?

The following was sent to us in response to the Snow Cow article we ran last week. BUT, we can't make sense of it. Send us your interpretation/translation to bull@mtu.edu with subject LOLRANT, and we'll run the best one!

OH I'm so damn proud of you. A Triumphant victory for mankind. Maybe there is Hope. It brought a tear to my eye and a lump to my throat. Staring out the window in a traffic jam for 3 hours watching the little lawnmower cars zoon past hundreds of happy Westerners smile and receiving them with a compassionate, full contact smile and stare.

You've made it. Have some fruit. Now you too can purchase pastel bed sheets, electronics and toilet paper of your wildest dreams. You have so much to learn. Thousands of grown infants, rosy red cheeks, fully dressed in acid wash pants & jackets. Males with moustache. Ladies with permanent hair. Look over there! it's my mom. She is so many years more advanced in the art of shopping & matching outfits from the luxury of selection.

You have so much to learn. Rock and roll has now just begun. Don't hide the products you have bought under your seats. Prepare yourself for a full search as you enter back through the border. Take note of the leaflets and flyers on your windshield informing you where to acquire credit and legal representation. I'm happy for you. Please reproduce. Were doing all we can over here as well.

Note: Seriously, wtf is this supposed to mean? If you want to send us feedback, please don't do it while stoned.

High Schools around the country are ecstatic to hear about the new video game. Principal Gene Moss from Tampa Bay High School said "I never thought I would see the day that our most gifted athletes would be willing to put down the football helmet and pick up the badminton racquet. The very thought brings a tear to my eye. Now we can finally approve the building of that badminton arena I've been proposing for the last 14 years!"

With all this talk of investment, President Barrack Obama weighed in with "The answer is clear - we need more obscure sport video games from EA Sports. Only then will this country reach its full potential" Badminton games are currently only available for viewing on ESPN 7, so check your local listings. 🐼
