A Tribute to Their Awesome

Nathan 'Invincible' Miller ~ Daily Bull Alumnus

Two gentlemen, one Bull. Want to know how it turned out? I'll tell you one thing, and that's that it was a lot more incredible and mind-bending than most can comprehend. I'll try my best to document their story but if you truly wish to learn of their greatness, I suggest you track them down and ask for yourself.

You see, Simon Mused and Stephen Whittaker were no ordinary students. True, this is said time and again to describe those that enter the realm of the Keweenaw. This time was different.

All those years ago when Simon first stepped foot on this hallowed ground, the Earth... no, the copper even... it felt his presence. With every footfall, native copper was drawn out of the stone towards him. Some say he was an environmental god, others an environmental engineer. Me? I believe that while born of this earth, the very thought that he would remain here in human form was laughable. One only had to look to the Cu to understand.

Unlike his more grounded counterpart, Whittaker was another sort of animal. A, how should I say it... a hedgehog. To augment his fast-paced lifestyle of jeeps, parties, and mopeds, Stephen held the power to transform at will into an adrenaline junkie with a penchant for rings. Despite having no need for additional bling, he could never quite shake the urge to beat his golden high score.

Two gentlemen, one Bull. Given the gravity of these two fellows, it was only a matter of time before they met one another. I cannot say for certain whether I was present during this momentous occasion, but I can assure you the results were astounding. Once-dry rivers flowed, meadows blossomed, herds of gazelle ran freely across the plains of the Serengeti, and a nascent civilization was founded on a faraway plan-

Achievement Unlocked: State of Mused

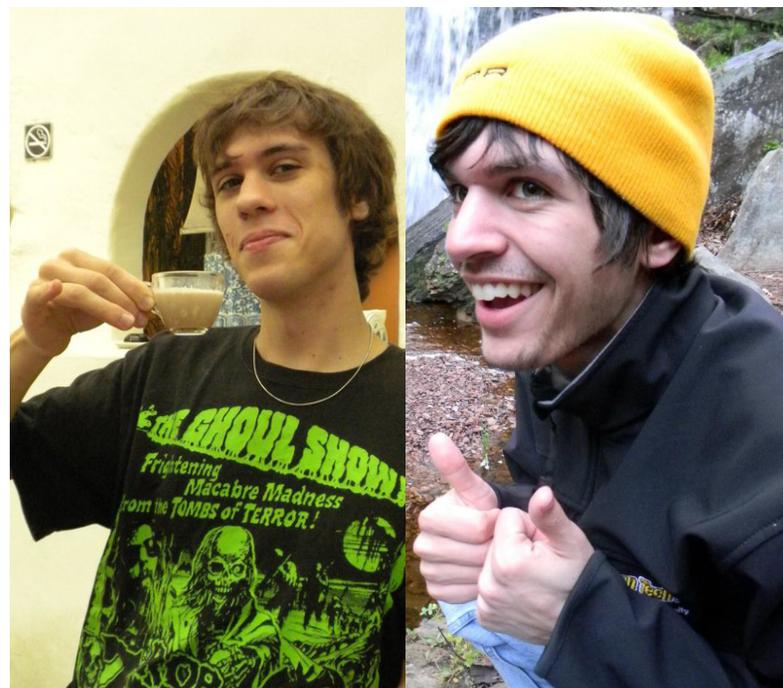

Olivia Zajac ~ Daily Bull

It has finally been done! Super-senior Simon Mused is graduating from Michigan Tech after having been involved in over 56 different student organizations, over half of which he started out of sheer boredom. "I decided I wasn't busy enough, and figured it would make my resume way more awesome and increase my chances of moving to New Zealand. They like that kinda stuff," Mused was quoted.

Friends and fellow student organization members of the rumored "Mu Beta Bull" are popping the bottles of champagne (with the approval of a combined use of their funds from USG). The general consensus is that they're fucking glad they got to know this oddball and his questionable ways of leadership. "He had us hunt down llamas during orientation instead of doing an ice-breaker," one freshman in this pretend-greek-awesome group was caught saying. (Sources also point towards Mused being the founder of Mu Beta Bull.)

Mused was kind and benevolent enough to grant us an interview. He whipped out his large, thick, impressive resume, and began listing off organizations he has participated in: Daily Bull, Mu Beta Psi, WMTU, Orientation, Rosza Box Office, SYP, Alcoholics Anonymous, Addicted to SCIENCE!, F.I.S.H, Single Mothers of Tech, Polygamous Fathers of the Keweenaw,

LONG LIVE EERC TREE, Hockey-hockeyhockey, Go to Bread, and Drink Motherfucker Drink!, to name a few. He leaned back in his chair, interlaced his fingers behind his head, and sighed deeply. "I'll miss this place. I'll miss being a Husky way more than I missed being a Tractor."

Much like Magicarp evolving into something more deadly than its initial form, we here at the Daily Bull are most certain that this former Tractor will evolve into an Environmental Engineering equivalent of a Gy-rados (whatever the fuck that would be). But we all know the legacy that Simon Mused leaves in his angry, dragon-y wake. No one messes with the Mused. Not even Glenn Mroz. From a random happenstance position conveniently outside of his office whilst Mroz was on the phone with the Queen of England, "That Simon Mused...I'd give him half of my golden pomeranian collection if he'd stay just another year."

So if you see this dapper fellow out and about on campus, make sure to tip your hat to him and his great achievements. Bask in his awesome glory. Be jealous that Glenn Mroz knows not only his name, but would be willing to part with half of his most prized collection, simply to have Mr. Mused grace us with his presence for another 365. Be envious, because you'll never be as fucking cool as the one and only Simon Mused. 🐾

What I've Learned at Michigan Tech

Stephen Whittaker ~ Daily Bull

This will be my very last article as an undergrad at Michigan Tech, so I thought it appropriate I bestow upon you some of my experience. You've probably heard it all before but now you get to hear it from my "Expert" point of view.

1. When Partying, Don't Expect There to be Many – if Any – Girls There

It's an obvious fact that there are way more dudes than ladies at Michigan Tech. If you haven't noticed this yet, go walk around campus for a few minutes and play a counting game. I'm sure you'll see soon enough. The point of what I want to tell you, though, is: don't get hung up on this. If you go to a party don't expect there to be girls because odds are there won't be many and all the good ones will be taken. Even still don't let this keep you from having fun and getting yourself into she-nigans.

2. KBC Beer is Delicious

from Our Powers Combined on front

et. And believe it or not, that was just the first 5 minutes of their friendship. At minute 7 and 8, Simon and Stephen realized that their combined prowess could have an amazing impact on anything they touched. Should they solve world hunger? Cure cancer? Instill love in the hearts of all of mankind? They decided that those things could wait until after they accomplished one thing: to help bring the Daily Bull back from the brink.

Once, long ago, the Daily Bull was not quite as funny or daily as it is now. Without Stephen and Simon holding up their corner of the circus tent, the show may not have gone on. Their contribution to keeping the midget weasels and gingivitis jokes alive cannot be understated. As their retired Bossman, I personally salute their service to fending off the Lode and ensuring the laughs never stopped rolling in. We not only hope you change the world for the funnier, but expect it. Make us proud, men. 🐾

To people that don't like beer, think that Bud Light actually tastes good (mmmm... it tastes like water), or even worse actually enjoy the taste of Busch (mmm... tastes like piss), it is all a lie and you should try some more KBC before you to depart from MTU.

3. Study Abroad

For at least one semester or summer go and get out of Houghton. Go somewhere far away and exotic. I don't care if its Germany, Costa Rica, China, or Sealand, just get out there and see something else. I love Houghton just as much as anybody but there is just so damn much more to see out there. I went to China and it completely changed my view of the world. I suggest you all do the same.

4. Broomball is Fun

Whether you play on a serious team, or a team that could give fewer fucks than Spiderman sitting in a tree, broomball is fun. Sliding around and falling on your ass has never been as awesome as it is in broomball. What makes it really great at MTU though is the fact that we students here take it both seriously and not at the same time. So if you haven't played on a team yet, get on one next year.

5. You Can Always Become a Business Major

Engineering is hard, no matter which disipline it is. The truth is, we are all not cut out for it and if you find yourself in a dire situation you can always become a business major. I've known plenty of people who have done it. Just remember in the words of Joe Esposito, "You're the best around, No one's ever gonna keep you down!"

Note: Comp. Editor can vouch for #5

There are plenty other things I could share with you but I'm going to cut it off here. Best of luck to you readers of the Bull, because I am ready to GTFO! 🐾
