Mother Nature is Late Again with a Bouncing Baby Snow Storm

By Josh Maiville - First Ever Article!

A week before spring break and only a month late Mother Nature gave birth to a 12" 50mph snow storm. The population of the general Houghton area proceeded to ask Mother Nature WTF?!?! Where the hell was all this a month ago when it was supposed to be snowy and was heating up? However experts have pointed out this warm up was most likely due to some heated action between Mother Nature and Old Man Winter.

While Mother Nature was forcing her hell force wrath of snow upon us a brave few ventured into the storm. In their quest for Taco Bell and Red Bull they fought through the storm stopping only in fear of the snow cow guardian that watches the corner by the broomball rinks. With the daunting journey ahead to a car located just on the other side of campus they set off. In this trek many stories were told of ages past and the real snow babies that Mother Nature has had. After a long and perilous walk across campus the trio arrived at the chariot of food running. From here they set off in the quest of taco goodness.

Skyrim Joke Spurs Student to Murder, Starts Trend

by Caroline Maye - First-Ever Article!

HOUGHTON-- The gruesome death last week of Freshman Erik Ward has recently come into a new light. During the trial that both began and ended today, his roommate turned murderer James Monty revealed that he did not murder Ward in an attempt to gain all As, but rather because of his roommate's love for the video game Skyrim and its most famous line. Yes, that one.

And this accusation is true- even the friends and family of Ward agreed that he made Skyrim jokes "way too damn much." Some recent estimates calculate his daily references to this joke in the low forties, though other sources call this too conservative an estimate, putting theirs at almost one hundred. This revelation has turned the public opinion of Monty from lukewarm to just plain warm, as well as shedding light on his unusual method of murder. According to reports, he bought a bow and set of arrows from one of the many local sports shops, then attempted to shoot Ward in the knee multiple times until he eventually gave up and started stabbing his body with the arrows like tiny daggers. His cry of "Why are bows so hard to use??" could be heard across DHH.

Pic o' the Day - DRINK ALL THE JUICEBOXES

The revelation of Monty's motive turned the trial swiftly in his favor, and he was found Not Guilty due to reasons of self-defense. One juror commented, "I don't know what this whole arrows and knees thing is all about, but my kid keeps talking about them too. In fact, this James kid had given me a great idea."

It seems that Monty has influenced many people, to the point where there is now a brotherhood of meme killers living in Houghton. Apparently a shadowy assassin of their ranks can be summoned via an arcane

So, how about that snow day?

Upon their arrival to the great taco provider they found themselves at a quandary. Which five-buck box to buy? This was solved quickly by the taco slave informing that they were running out of red Fritos, which they can't go to the store and buy a new bag of...so it was the Burrito of the Crunchy Beef Box. The venture continued from there to the great castle of Wal-Mart -- a place so vastly filled with sorrow, lost dreams and souls that it makes Keanu Reeves career look like it could replace Morgan Freeman. Here they acted quickly and gathered the liquid gold known as Red Bull along with other assorted snack foods. They ran out hastily being chased away by the soulless zombies that occupy the horror halls of Wal-Mart.

After this narrow escape the trio fled back to their hideaway home In Walker. Once back they regaled the less adventurous few that stayed back to hold down the fort with stories of the daring tale to get food. Red Bull was drunk, meat was eaten, and music and minstrels were everywhere. With the joyous bounty of food and drink the trio let the night slip away into morning. At this point the three of them remembered that they had class that morning and an exam in that class as well. To add to all this there was a large storm blowing in with high winds and lots of snow.....Mother Nature says suck on it spring break! ☹ ritual involving several things not allowed in the residence halls, like candles, unregistered weapons, and human organs. This assassin will supposedly only kill people deemed worthy, such as those whose only reply to almost every sentence is "that's what she said", people who still find intense humor at numbers like 42, 9001 and 69, and people who still go on the Michigan Tech memes page. ☹
