Springtime Tales

by Veronica Tabor ~ Daily Bull

Spring has come once again to Michigan Tech. The sun is shining, the birds are chirping, the grass is greener, and the clothing is smaller. Most people find it really nice that we are getting 70+ degree temperatures in March. But the weather isn't always this way- most of the time, the snow sticks around for April, May, and even June. I have compiled a few horror stories, dug up from the archives of the local weather bureau, that tell of the times when winter did not leave quietly.

"I had just gotten out of the shower, and was running late to my Calc final. I went outside and my hair instantly froze into mini-icicles. I just happened to pass my friend by on the sidewalk. When I turned my head to send her a friendly greeting, the centripetal force of my neck sent the icicles flying and they im-

New Strand of Grossness

by Olivia Zajac ~ Daily Bull

Houghton has another claim to fame as of March 1st. This particular type of hype is not the kind Houghton is used to. The city is now known for breeding a new, extremely vicious and extremely resilient sexually transmitted disease. It comes as no surprise to those in health care that this coincides with the opening of the new club downtown.

Microbiologists have been conducting research and experiments on this new STD, and have been able to compile a short list of characteristics of the disease. They had this to say, "The disease thrives on what we have named the 'alcohol sweats'. This is when you are in small, cramped, hot, sweaty spaces and start to simply sweat out the alcohol you have been ingesting.

One can contract this STD by indirect contact of genitalia--it is strong enough to travel through the skimpy layers that separate these young people from basically having a giant orgy every weekend night. It can develop within 12 hours of contact, and is physically characterized by a purple rash spreading over any part of the dermis that has come in contact with the disease. It is quite tragic, and nothing seems to calm the violent itch that also ensues."

While there is no official name for the disease yet, the local campus has simply nicknamed it "Purple Fire". While it is horrid that such a thing has developed, it has become easier for all those desperate, single men to sort out the skanky from the innocent. "This one girl I've had a crush on since like, Freshman year, had a huge ring of Purple Fire around her mouth and generally on her facial orifices. Major turn-off."

Some of the more promiscuous members of the community are outraged at the lack of immediate remedy for their blazing purple predicament. "Well if I had known that I would be, like, marked, or had a chance of actually catching something, I wouldn't've gone down on that guy in the men's room. But I'm young! This stuff isn't supposed to happen to me!" one unnamed female was quoted.

The World Health Organization has not bothered to acknowledge this outbreak. "The isolated area that is Houghton will just kill the disease off itself. It won't spread, it will stay contained. It isn't until it makes it to Northern that we really have to worry about anything.

Until then, just avoid alcohol and densely populated quarters to help prevent the spread." Unfortunately, the advice of no alcohol is sure to cause uproar by all those plagued with the Purple Fire. If they have to suffer with the clearly visible evidence of being overly amorous, they might as well drown their sorrows in more alcohol.

The Sandwich That Fought Back

by Steve Whittaker ~ Daily Bull

A local convenience store was being help up earlier this morning by an armed gunman when a local sandwich came and stopped the robbery.

The gunman was waiting as the clerk filled up a sack with the register's cash when the sandwich came into the store and managed to stop the gunman in his tracks. Using its trademark move known only as deliciousness, the sandwich was able to detain the suspect until the local law enforcement arrived. It was a tasty ending to a deadly situation.

But who is this elusive sandwich? Known to the locals as the Masked Pastrami, this sandwich has been creating quite a buzz. Spawned in a downtown deli, the Masked Pastrami has been fighting a recent crime wave that has hit the city. The super sandwich uses deliciousness as his main weapon.

simple process; first the sandwich will use its hunger vision to famish the crooks. After which the foe has the scene to deal with the suspect. In order to prevent from being completely consumed by criminals, the Masked Sandwich uses its regenerative powers that are fueled by his partners Bread, Meat, and Cheese.

The original sandwich artist, Harold Goldman, is credited with creating the powerful crime fighter. During a recent interview Harold told us, "It came to me one day during the lunch rush as I watched how immobilized people became once eating my sandwiches."

We have been unable to catch up to the sandwich to get an interview, though the locals that have had contact with it have told us that it is the strong silent type preferring to leave the scene as soon as authority figures arrive. If you have seen the sandwich in action then we want to hear about it.

paled her. It was so tragic, and so difficult to explain to the police." -Rebecca, during finals week in April, 1999.

"I was walking with my friend, Fred, to the Library on a Sunday, and of course the University does not plow the pathways on the weekend. We were just innocently strolling along, when a ferocious gust of wind tossed him into the nearest snow bank. I turned to help him, but it was too late. With no clear ground nearby due to the lack of plowing, getting out of the snow bank was impossible. I watched as my friend was sucked in, knowing there was nothing I could do to save him. RIP Fred." -George, during summer classes, July 2003

"I was galloping upon my horse, almost a tad bit late to my mining education course, when suddenly ol' Butterscotch stopped short. I was mildly confused for a second. She had just stopped in a clearing, no building in sight! I said 'Goll darn Butterscotch, what you be doin' stoppin' here? It was seemingly just an open-snow covered field. Twas' then when I realized-that this WAS the Michigan College of Mines! It was just completely buried from the snowstorm the night before!" -Jonathan St. McLawrenceston, October 1902.
