Dining Dollar Theft

by Alex Dinsmoor ~ Daily Bull

HOUGHTON, MI - Recent reports from the head of Public Safety reveal an increased amount of armed robberies on campus for dining dollars in and around the MUB, Campus Cafe, and Aftermath Café. The majority of arrests are reported to be Freshmen, but there are few upperclassmen that are doing these terrible crimes to the students of Michigan Tech.

"As the semester winds down, so do the amount of dining dollars left on the accounts of the many students who have meal plans. For many students, they have been out of dining dollars for weeks, however there are the rare few who have been out for months. Those students who ran through their dining dollars very early have gone what we in the department call "Dining hall delusional", if one eats nothing but dining hall food for long enough, they effectively go crazy." Stated the head of public safety.

THE HUNGER GAMES!

By Nathan 'Invincible' Miller ~ Former Boss Man

Man these Hunger Games are fantastic. ...are they? I'm actually not quite sure, since I'm not very immersed in today's culture. Friends? Bah! The friends I know or talk to aren't the sort of folks that would tell me what the Hunger Games are. Or maybe they did... I may have ignored them if that's the case. Sometimes I space out.

Either way, I don't have any idea what the Hunger Games are. In my mind I imagine a bunch of fat (or maybe even skinny) people duking it out on the society's next worst reality show.

Forget plots, just do stupid things in front of TV cameras! Why do we keep doing this to ourselves?! Wasn't Jersey Shore bad enough?! Now the Hunger Games comes along and everybody's all like, "I'm gonna pick Team Blender, because however this show works I

Team Waffle Iron and the Skillet Squad are naturally pissed off, so some stone-cold serious show host appears to help resolve the dispute through challenges designed to make everyone as miserable as possible. Thankfully our society enjoys the misery of others, so we find the Hunger Games extremely exciting.

I'm right because I can't hear you! LA LA LA

Maybe the show is set up like Iron Chef, where the teams have to use certain ingredients and make the best meal using their respective devices. Or maybe they just make great food and intentionally burn it in front of starving Africans! HAHA AMERICAN CABLE ROCKS

Actually I don't have cable so I'll never know. Drats! Not really though, I'd rather spend my money on fast internet or go outside than watch crappy television like the Hunger Games.

Then one day while I was on the internet I learned that the Hunger Games are actually a movie and apparently people who liked Twilight are totally into it. That either means A) my prediction is entirely true, or B) IT'S WORSE THAN I THOUGHT! AH!!!

Oh God, we're going to hell.

Please, friends (if we're still friends after I ignored you for telling me about the Hunger Games), don't ever ask me to watch that TV show/movie/holographic cooking experience. I beg you! I successfully did not watch the movie, read the books, or even skim the Wikipedia article about Twilight, and I would rather keep my poor brain pure of all facts about the Hunger Games. That means under no circumstances should anyone try to tell me what they are really about. Remember that in some cases, ignorance really is strength.

I invite those of you with minds unexposed to whatever the Hunger Games really are to join me in my quest for mental purity.

Together we will overcome the worst that society has to throw at us, whether it be bad vampire novels or pregnant Oompa Loompas suffering from retardation. ☹

Every semester, public safety reports higher and higher numbers of these crimes being committed as the semester progresses. The increased number of occurrences can be contributed to the "credit card effect" that dining dollars have on a person; the more money they have access to without physical contact, the faster they spend it. In the upcoming weeks left of the semester, Public Safety expects to see an increased number of Dining Dollar related crimes.

"Crimes like this range anywhere from people stealing the I.D. cards of those who look similar to them to buy food, or to holding things hostage in exchange for orders of cheese curds. Crimes like these are almost impossible to spot, making reporting from the student body extremely important." Public Safety, working with the university administration, is toying with preventive measures in order to counteract the crimes that the University is currently facing. Things such as making Dining Dollars time sensitive, dolling out the dining dollars, requiring pin codes, and tattooing barcodes that are associated with one's ID card have all been discussed, but no clear solution has come forward.

Public safety urges all students at Michigan Tech to report any cases of dining dollar theft to the them, as in the final months of the school year, those with premium plans who have lots of money left over are becoming more and more lucrative targets. ☹

HEY LOOK! AN AD! You can have these, too, if you want. Just give us a holler at bull@mtu.edu to find out more -- and make sure you bring cashy moneydollars. MAKE IT RAIN UPON US!
