Unconfirmed Reports of Second Campus Publication

from Liz Fujita

Inspired by David "Advisorman" Olson

Students across campus have been sending in unconfirmed reports that there is, indeed, a second publication here at Michigan Tech. One witness claimed that it was "newspaper-like in appearance, and very skittish. It fled from sight when I tried to pick it up – maybe it's not used to human contact, the poor thing." The anonymous source vowed that she would try again with more quality traps after spring break, "for science."

The Bull's own Ruben Garcia insists that finding this other printing could be catastrophically difficult. "I've never even seen one on any day of the week besides, like, Thursdays. It must be really, really good because every single copy is gone every day of the week." The only pattern that Garcia could identify was that the sudokus in the leftover issues were "too fucking hard." Junior physicist Bahn Malec agreed, scribbling furiously and ultimately breaking his pencil over his knee with an Achilles-like scream.

Studying the elusive "other paper" will prove challenging. The Bull has asked various professors from all departments for their insider expertise, but so far the only facts we have gathered are:

1. It exists (source: department of humanities)
2. It is made of paper (source: department of materials science)
3. It may not be written in English (source: ESL instructors)
4. Decryption of the name suggests it is called either the Toad or the Road (source: department of mathematics)
5. It is fast, elusive, rare, and probably critically endangered/borderline extinct (source: department of biological sciences)

If you spot one of these strange, incomprehensible, elusive items around campus, please be sure to report it to the correct authorities to be studied and documented. The Daily Bull is like the seagull – in every corner of the earth, stealing your french-fries, and probably screaming for no apparent reason. This fabled other school paper, on the other hand, is akin to the dodo – so rare no one has ever seen it, humorously named, and doesn't appreciate having mustaches drawn on it by immature Daily Bull staffers.
