Valuable Lesson for First Years

By Jon "Big O" Mahan ~ Daily Bull

I know what most of you are thinking. I'm in college, I don't need no help! Well apparently you do with grammar and English, but that's besides the point. Every year hundreds of freshmen are lost on the great trek to their car in lot 21. It may seem insignificant and small, but you'd be amazed. Once the snow starts to settle in it can become impossible to tell one turn from another, one house from another, or even your own car from a snow drift. So take this tale as warning.

The year was 2006. It was just another winter day, and several freshmen decided to make a winter Bdubs run. The Red Wings were playing, and everyone wanted to have a

The Great Space Debates, Pt. 1

By Nathan "Invincible" Miller ~ Daily Bull

We're in the thick of it my friends – election season is upon us! Now that the D and R camps have chosen their respective champions of 2012, all that's left is to convince the citizenry that they're the best! Hooray! BARF.

I'm sure you're just as sick of hearing about politics as I am. That's why for the next several weeks, I'll be reporting the hard-hitting political mumbo jumbo from space! Because really, everything is better beyond low Earth orbit. There's a reason Congress keeps cutting NASA's budget, and it isn't the recession. It's because they're afraid that they'll lose their jobs to space representatives! Duh!

This week's debates will take place in our very own inner solar system. With zero electoral votes under the current system, you can be sure that the primary concern for voters in this district will be representation in future space committees.

In the first leg of this campaign tour, our candidates stopped briefly with the Solar and Heliospheric Observatory (SOHO) to ask it about its views on plugging the nation's huge deficit.

After turning slowly to face the candidates in their intergalactic campaign-mobiles, SOHO ground a few gears within its broken gyroscopes. "Aha!" seized Romney, "SOHO obviously disagrees with Obama's handling of the country's economic recovery! If elected, I promise to not only allow for continued monitoring of our Sun to prevent fiscal irresponsibility, I will also ensure that your gyroscopes are in full working order by no later than 2035."

Not to be outdone by the outlandishness of Romney's statements, Obama promised full funding for a replacement of SOHO, as the spacecraft has been hurtling around in space since before Pokémon was invented. "Just throwing more money down the hole," quipped Romney. SOHO contemplated both remarks with speculation.

Next stop, Mercury. With about as many interesting things as the state of Rhode Island, the first planet in our solar system therefore received an equivalent amount of attention from the battling candidates. Obama promised to bring astronauts to the planet in the near future, despite cancelling the Constellation Program in 2010. The few life forms that exist on Mercury laughed heartily. In contrast, Romney lauded the rocky world's tenacity. "Here's a planet that's taken no handouts, yet continues to thrive in the face of utter annihilation. Mercury should be a model for everyone." The aforementioned life forms, in celebration of their new hero, emerged upon the surface only to be baked to a crisp before casting a single ballot.

Upon arrival at Venus, the candidates were both halted by the inhospitable atmosphere and crushing pressures. Numerous attempts at installing sound stages and balloon drops were foiled when the debate setup crews were boiled alive after stepping foot on the surface of the planet. "The United States will not tolerate attacks on its citizens," Obama proclaimed hesitantly, "Unless the attacker is an entire planet, in which case we'll just leave you guys alone to sort out your own problems. See ya!"

Says Romney, "My opponent obviously is a chicken and misleading the public. Nothing will stop my campaign, neither sulfuric acid rain or runaway greenhouse effects! Venus for Romney 2012!"

However, they made a wrong turn, and when the snow cleared, they found themselves at Wal-Mart

"How the fuck did we end up here," they asked each other.

"Nevermind, lets just head back," the driver said. The snow picked up just as they left the Wal-Mart parking lot, and they walked for what seemed like hours, maybe days. At the end of their journey, they found themselves in Sault Ste. Marie. "Okay, what the hell. How did we make it all the way to the damned Soo," the driver asked. One passenger piped up, "Well, now we're at least closer to Bdubs?" "Fukkit. Let's just walk there," the driver responded. And so the team set off. Without any iPhones, or androids, the best they were able to do, was just walk using a picture of a map they had on their phones. Carefully following it the young adventurers eventually ended up just where they needed to be. Lot 21. "Okay, what the hell... At least we're here now," said the driver. They all piled in and had a merry time at Bdubs. Of course, the story could have ended up much, much worse, so next time you freshmen decide that you want to go to lot 21, make sure to bring a weather resistant GPS. Also, making sure you can tell the difference between your car and a snowbank will help a lot. ☹
