Transformers

By Kay McMahan ~ Daily Bull

Not only has this week been shitty and rainy but it's been an even bigger, rainier shit show trying to navigate this cold and wet campus in search of a computer lab. No MTU, we don't need computers. Not at an engineering universities. We don't need computers when every single professor of ours posts our homework on canvas and it's recommended that we check out emails more than twice a day.

You'll come to find that the Business lab in the Academic Office Building has down sized from seating over thirty to merely four. That lab was packed all the time. Every single day you had to be there early enough to GET a seat. More importantly the Computer Science Lab in Fisher has been entirely cut in half. "I have begun teaching my students computer programming with chisels on stones, it truly is an upsetting

MTU to Approve Cannabis Dispensary Enterprise

By Alec Hamer ~ Daily Bull

Earlier this month the MTU Enterprise Board approved an application for a new enterprise entitled Excellence in Cannabis or EiC. The new enterprise is sponsored by Get High magazine and strives to achieve its mission statement of "Getting you higher longer."

As anyone could imagine- there are a lot of logistics involved with the growing and distribution of cannabis. It seems interest is high for the new enterprise with close to 300 students trying to attend the first information session. The session was held in DOW 312. Needless to say there was not enough room and the event had to be moved to Fisher 135 where everyone was seated and a short presentation was given.

Although they weren't able to divulge everything about the enterprise they were able to share with prospective students that the glass boob (the greenhouse between the chem sci. and MEEM buildings) would be available to "grow as much as will fit".

"As you can see, this strain does very well indoors and we're confident that the Boob will provide an excellent growing environment. Indeed, we plan to unveil a phallus-shaped greenhouse next year."

This would be easier with liquor.

situation..." raged one angry professor.

Where did they go? Are these very computers we use missing because there are so few fucking transformers? What did they autobot on and walk the fuck away?

I will say at first I liked the idea of the "open" labs. You can swipe access any lab but I bet you a million fucking dollars that

1. Someone is teaching in that lab
2. The lab is full

And good fucking luck printing anything at this university, anywhere, ever. SO MTU, if you really do have an in with the transformers of the world please, be an Optimist Prime, not a Negatron. WE NEED LABS! 🐮

When asked about how the plants will be grown, Bill Weathers of Get High magazine said "their first project will be to create a biosphere within the glass boob. That's right, a biosphere where all the CO2 is created by burning cannabis and all the oxygen is created by the cannabis plants... It will be spectacular!!"

Unfortunately, Bill was unable to provide more info due to a diabolical laugh but from information provided during the information session it seems that EiC intends to seal off the glass boob and regulate the amount of CO2 by burning cannabis. People looking to get high would be encouraged to enter the vessel and smoke weed until there was enough smoke in the air for the plants to breathe.

"The concept is brilliant" one cannabis using professor pointed out. "Think about how it's like a complete circle, man. I mean this shit is incredible!" Though, not everyone is pleased with the idea.

One MTU student's Mom pointed out that she doesn't want her child "bearing witness to the use of the devil's plant". It appears to be a bold move to grow cannabis in the middle of campus. Several national anti-drug groups, most notably the Drug Enforcement Agency (DEA), want to see the "cannabis production factory" shut down. In a leaked document recently acquired, evidence has emerged that the DEA would plan to shut down the operation before it even started. "... if we let the brilliant minds of Michigan Technological University start growing cannabis there's no telling how many Americans will die from a weed overdose!!"

The only option: send in agents to destroy the glass boob before the first seed is planted." No member of the university administrative staff could be reached for comment. 🐮

News In Briefs: Hockey's Locked Out, Too?

By Cameron Long ~ Daily Bull

GARY BETTMAN'S ASSHOLE, USA -- It was announced last week that the NHL owners would lock the players out if the two sides could not agree on a new collective bargaining agreement. YAY (FUCK) UNIONS! As expected, the lockout began at 11:59 on Sunday the 16th with the NHLPA and the owners not even having met for five days. Both parties have been blaming the other for the mess, even though they're both equally responsible.

"We were feeling left out, really," said an unnamed douche of a commissioner. "What with the NFL and NBA locking out in recent years, not to mention the current NFL referees lockout, we just wanted to be taken seriously like those other guys. Now we're legitimate!"

The key issue at stake - mmm...steak - is how to slice a $3.3 billion pie. A few percentage points here and there add up to real money and everyone involved is too greedy to be the bigger man and give up a few hundred thou.

"You see, we both want, like, 80 percent of the cash," said Donald Fehr, the NHLPA's executive director. "They want it, we want it, and we're all just hoping the fans are too stupid to notice. They're all dumb sheep. They'll always be back when we pull our collective head out of our collective ass."

The sad thing is that he's at least somewhat correct. Hockey fans are some of the most diehard folks anywhere and chances are that they'll continue to pay $8.50 per beer to fund the next lockout, already scheduled for 2018. Goddamn price inelasticity of demand. 🐮
