What a Strange Bunch

By Cameron Long ~ Daily Bull

We have a number of ways to pass the time here at the Daily Bull. Office hours are 10-2, Monday through Friday, and they're interminable without entertainment. Whether it's sitting back and gazing at the lovely ~~panorama~~ stretching out before us MEEM, watching stupid shit on Youtube with Mu Beta Psi, or just playing with Woobles, we have a good time.

Latelately Yesterday, though, certain staff members (haha, dicks) revisited an old favorite: saying creepy things through vuvuzelas. Remember our vuvuzelas? We handed them out at Spring Fling 2011 and K-Day the following Fall. I'd bet the faculty remember them :P Anyway, here's how it goes: you sneak up behind someone (honestly, a very good friend is ideal), place the bell of the vuvuzela next to their ear, the mouthpiece to your lips, and whisper something creepy, vaguely disturbing, or dirty.

It's Not What It Looks Like

By Rico Bastian ~ Daily Bull

It was reported this week that your roommate wishes to assure you that when you walked into the dorm the other day, it was "not at all what you might think it is."

"Seriously man, I know that it looked pretty suspicious, but you gotta believe me," your roommate said. "Just hear me out."

This explanation came shortly after you had come into the room and seeing your roommate with his pants down and his laptop opened. He frantically shut his laptop and pulled up his pants the moment you walked through the door. Your roommate also reported that you and he need to have a talk about knocking, despite the fact that you knocked on the door and waited a few moments with no response.

"Come on dude, it's just common courtesy," Your roommate added. "I could be getting changed or something."

Your roommate also continued to list reasons why you shouldn't just "barge

Let's face it: there's just no risk-free way to fool around in a dorm room.

I can't, I'm too full of Ming's!

in without making your presence known." He claimed that if the door is closed, he may be trying to concentrate really hard on his homework, or maybe he's in a rough emotional state where he wishes to just be left alone. He even went on to say that sometimes he's just very frightened if the door suddenly opens.

Though you showed no signs of caring about what you may or may not have walked in on, your roommate was very persistent in making sure that you knew exactly what was going on when you came into the room.

"I like to do my homework in the nude," Your roommate explained. "There's just something about clothes that make me less productive. I also shut my laptop the second you walked in because I was working on a very important paper, and I don't like people to see any of my work before it's done."

"Whatever you say man," You responded.

As of press time, your roommate hasn't reopened his laptop since you came into the room. He also has become very curious in your schedule for the rest of the day.

"So, do you have any more classes today?" Your roommate asked you. "No? Well, have you eaten yet? When do you think you're going to be heading to dinner? That's a pretty late dinner if you ask me. Hey, I really need to get back to this report, but I also haven't checked my mail yet today. Do you think you could go check it for me? Oh, you already got the mail? Are you sure mail was done? Oh, okay, you just got it. You look like you could use some sauna ti-- oh, you have to go to the bathroom? Number one or number two?"
