Dept. of Pubic Safety Can't Get Funding Up

By Liz "Riz" Fujita ~ Daily Bull

Michigan Tech's Pubic Safety department is having a very difficult time raising funds to continue services next semester. A subdepartment of HOWL and Counseling Services, Pubic Safety employs five highly trained officers who watch out for the genital health of Tech students. They wander campus, issuing manscape infringement punishments (MIPs), dildo use infractions (DULs), and tickets for unnecessary showcasing of junk.

The department is accepting any and all donations at its "Take a Peek Week" fundraiser. Anyone can attend for fun games (including wildly popular "Bobbing for STDs" and "Pin the Tramp Stamp on the Strumpet") and sexual health information.

MTU SafeHouse Seeks Not to Repeat Last Years Tragedy

By Jon "Big O" Mahan ~ Daily Bull

HOUGHTON, MI - The IRHC SafeHouse will be hosted again this year for the children of the Houghton area. Although it takes place before Halloween, the event has been a fun one for kids, college students, and parents since it started in 1988. However, the event was marred last year by the tragedy in Wadsworth which resulted in hundreds dead, and many more injured in what has been dubbed "The-Event-That-Shall-Not-Be-Named."

Nobody speaks of the event when asked. It's almost as if the student body has been brain washed. "I don't remember that happening. Wouldn't we have been told about that if it happened? I'm sure there would have been a lawsuit or something" said one second year student. Every student we asked had roughly the same thoughts. We did however find one local whom hadn't forgotten the terrible incident.

"Oh ya eh. I remember dat eh. Guts and bones and bodies everywhere eh? I'm surprised Michigan Tech is still around, eh?" said one local who lives out in the woods. It's said he dropped by the SafeHouse to pick up some candy before hibernating for winter, when he found the bloody scene, but since most people seem to have forgotten the incident, there's little knowledge about what actually happened, or how he remembered it when everyone else seems to be more focused on what Kim Kardashian and her butt are doing.

Either way, SafeHouse is ramping up, advertising for people to come to their shenanigans more than they have in the past. After all, it's a safer alternative to walking around the hills and neighborhoods in Houghton talking to who knows who, who are doing who knows what. Can you really trust candy from a random individual who's house you just knocked on? More than one child has received cosmic brownies., and not the kind you can get from Little Debbie.

The Daily Bull will be watching the event, making sure that no murders, child slavery rings, or any other illegal or illicit activities pop up during this respected, fun, and family friendly event! We'll report it all to you, and make sure nobody forgets both the terrible events of 2011, and anything else that might happen this year. Enjoy Halloween, kiddos! And make sure the ghosts of Safehouse past don't get you. No really, don't.

Thousands Flock to Culvers for Near Religious Pilgrimage

By Liz "Riz" Fujita ~ Daily Bull

As the new Culver's in Houghton opened its holy doors to the lost and fast-food weary masses of the area, no one could have predicted the volume of believers that would flood their establishment. Rabid fallen Dairy Queen believers shuffled in with some trepidation, driven mad by guilt at taking up a new food faith. Angry and radical Jimmy Johns nonbelievers rejoiced at the opportunity to go somewhere new. Broken hearted Perkins-worshippers crawled into the tender arms (and chicken strips) of Culver's, seeking answers to the emptiness in their hearts and bellies.

The results were National Geographic worthy. Culvers instantly became the new Mecca of Houghton -- students fought through waves of traffic and crippling lack of cash to get a taste of just one cheese curd. Former Homecoming king Eric Johnson wiped a single, emotional tear from beneath a left eye that sparkled with admiration and future heart disease. "It's just... it answered my prayers. My tastebuds feel like they've been born again with these fries and this burger! Allelujah!"

This isn't to say that every single person has seen the heavenly light of the new Culvers. Some food atheists are making a stink over the fad-like popularity of frozen custard, likening it to the coming and going of scientology. "You'd be just as upset if a cheese curd jumped up and down on Oprah's couch," scoffed Tom Cruise, professor of crazyology at Michigan Tech.

The nonbelievers are few and far between, however, and we can rest assured that their drive through communion line will remain overflowing for at least a week.

dent, Glenn, walking tenderly on crutches these last few days, don't worry. He's better than okay - he is a hero. An onslaught of angry bears and wolves assaulted the campus this weekend, and yet the students are none the wiser. Glenn Mroz, Golden Boat Extraordinaire, sensing their approach, rushed to the aid of the students he cares so much about.

"It was like BAM BAM POWWWW!" enthused a jubilant (non-devoured) sophomore. "He just kicked all those bears in the balls and saved the entire school from being eaten alive!"

The wolves and bears most likely came to campus seeking tender flesh - they were lured by the smell of fear and despair wafting up the peninsula following another rough midterm season. Glenn held them off with his own hands, killing 15 bears and 27 wolves. Only one got the better of him; it took a small nibble out of his leg while he was busy making sure Les Cook made it to safety. If you see this valiant soldier on his noble crutches, be sure to thank him for keeping you safe and jugular-bite free! 🐾
