Elevator DOs

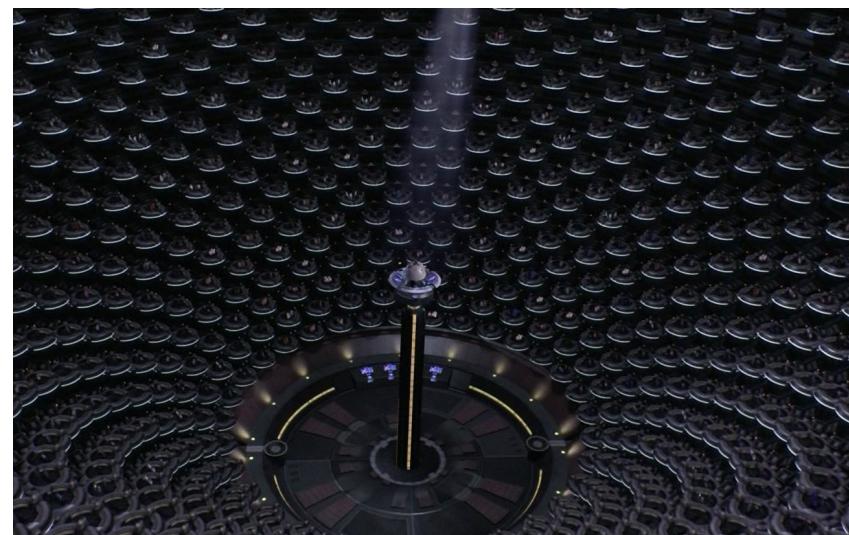

By Sam Schall ~ Daily Bull

Being a tech campus, there is a relative amount of inherent laziness in all of us, let it be after jogging or class to just having eaten or needing to get up more than 3 or 4 floors. The beautiful invention of the elevator has encouraged this laziness, being in all buildings and usually easily usable for anyone, especially those who aren't handicapped one way or another.

There are some common curiosities that need to be laid out though, as many people don't know what they should do if they come across a particularly crowded elevator. So here's a list of things we have worked on and compiled for your reference:

1: Jump. Because we know that the elevators are so well maintained and always taken care of, the cables in them are extremely strong

Deep in the Milky Way galaxy far from their home planet, Barack Obama and his challenger Mitt Romney face off for the last time before Americans, space beings, sentient rocks, and figments of one's imagination head to the polls. Having traveled hundreds of trillions of kilometers to prove to voters that their platform is clearly the best for the United States, our candidates had one last stop before their day of reckoning: THE INTERGALACTIC TRIBUNAL OF INHABITED MILKY WAY WORLDS.

Populated by members from all reaches of the galaxy, the Tribunal presides over the testiest of matters, both big and small. Warring planetary systems and bickering tribes all are welcome to bring their qualms to the stand – for a price. In order to keep the Tribunal functioning throughout the eons, the losing party for each disagreement must stay on to represent their system... forever! Think of it as paying a very high price for losing a court case. thousand years back Martians once sat on the Tribunal, but they had long faded away into dust.

Neck and neck with mere days to go before the election, Obama and Romney decided the only way to truly decide the next President would be to make a case to the Tribunal. If this were a documentary, a montage of each candidate pleading their case would play in the background while narrator Morgan Freeman heightens the tension by describing how the loser would never see their family again and the winner goes on to lead the free world.

After hearing their arguments for what seemed like weeks, the Tribunal came together to discuss the matter at hand. First and foremost, it was pointed out that there were currently no Earthlings in the body, so whatever the outcome, it will increase diversity by a small amount. A few hundred

Being an impartial and independent body made up of tens of thousands of differing opinions, the Tribunal found Romney's opaque tax plan unnerving. Said one shimmering wave-like creature from Delta Pavonis, "Despite often inhabiting cloud-covered planets, we value transparency above most other considerations." Undaunted, Romney reminded everyone that Barack probably would start enacting strict gun control laws if elected to a second term.

"Your puny Earth weapons are but pebble shooters compared to the weaponry we have confiscated over the millennia," squelched a mechanical titan of Nu Scorpii. "Whatever platform you support on your planet will have no consequence in your sector overall."

Sensing an opportunity to join like-minded individuals, Barack thought long and hard about derailing his campaign on purpose in order to be trapped in such a logical and fair system. "It's like they actually care about getting things done," he thought to himself. "All I'd have to do is tell the poor to work harder to fix America and I could help decide the fates of entire star systems. Sure, I don't think anyone plays basketball here but this might be my chance to contribute on a truly universal scale."

Will Obama decide to join the Tribunal? Will Romney tour the galaxy in his intergalactic speaker-circuit-mobile? Who will crown themselves POTUS for 4 more years?! Choose their destiny next Tuesday! ↗ and will never give out. Nor will that middle Wadsworth elevator stop suddenly and trap you and everyone else in it for a few hours at a time.

2: Sex. Those mysterious clear fluids on the floor of the elevator are great for guessing games for everyone that uses the elevator after you. And for those in there while you enjoy the most beautiful activity that is usually a sin, it's a wonderful show and they can even comment and help you improve your form and angle.

3: Start a conversation with the most uncomfortable looking person. Those silly CS majors shouldn't be out of their caves until the summer anyway, so it's proper to punish them for sneaking out and trying to use an elevator with so many other people in it already. Start talking to them and make them realize that all the rumors on the internet are true about people and that everyone biological should be avoided.

4: Hugs. Whether it's the end of a long day of classes and teaching or the beginning, you can be sure that everyone needs a good big bear hug from a total stranger. It'll cheer up anyone's day.

5: Farts. Just make sure no one realizes it was you with a beautiful silent but deadly one and everyone will be thanking you for killing their appetite. It'll help everyone not eat lunch and lose weight fast.

6: Drinking. Since it's totally not illegal and against campus rules to drink on campus, bring that 5th of Skyy with you to party in the biggest elevator and get everyone taking "SHOTS SHOTS SHOTS" all the way to the top floor.

7: Hit ALL the buttons. It looks like a Christmas tree and everyone loves Christmas trees, so why not let people see one now and light up all the buttons. It's not like people have places to go.

8: Singing to the elevator music. It'll get everyone in a cheery mood. And if there's not music in your elevator, make some up and sing loud and proud.

9: Take up more space as possible. Bulk up that backpack and spread out those elbows, everyone needs personal space and you should take up as much of yours as possible.

10: Call Emergency Phone, aka Sex Phone Line. Either to send out the pleasures or to get them, you know that there will be someone on the other end of that line every time. So open that zipper and dip in and give their ears the pleasure they want. ↗
