The test of a first-rate intelligence is the ability to hold two opposed ideas in mind at the same time and still retain the ability to function.

Local Satirical Writer Has Article Abruptly Derailed

by Ryan Grainger ~ Daily Bull

In a tragic series of events, one of the writers of the esteemed publication Daily Bull had one of their articles entirely derailed by an anonymous third party. Unfortunately, the article in question was published before the damage done could be corrected. Authorities are clueless as to how something like this could happen. We went straight to the author to see if we could gather any additional information.

"I don't know how it happened. I started writing a story about an article in the Daily Bull or something like that, submitted it and then went on my merry way. The next day, the article retained a little bit of the original

Why Girls Hate Other Girls

by K Like the Letter ~ Daily Bull

All the things you want to say to friends to get them to stop doing some of the annoying things they don't know they do really get me. You love them, you really do. But sometimes you just can't stand the shit they do.

For example, the infamous "Can I have a sip of that." You know if I wanted to share my drink I would just bring you one. No, you cannot drink my fucking Pepsi. If you want a Pepsi, go get a Pepsi. So you reply to them, "I am really sick right now..." and they inevitably respond with, "Whatever, I really don't care." Maybe your broke ass doesn't care, but my sick ass just spent $1.50 on this Pepsi. Sometimes it's acceptable but EVERY single time you see your friend with a beverage does not entitle you to a "sip".

Another thing that really gets people is when your friends think they know what's best for you. Do you honestly know for a fact that if I eat a brick of cheddar cheese

I will get fat and constipated? Do you REALLY know that if I skip class I will fall out of college and become a hooker in Cambodia? How do you measure the fucks that I give, if I give not one? Get off my nuts. You don't know my life.

And, honestly, girls never stop talking. They want to talk about everything all the time. They want to talk about Facebook, strippers, that girl is a whore, I ran into my ex-boyfriend today, his new girlfriend is such a slut, they want to know exactly what you're wearing before they meet up with you so you don't look cuter than them. And out of all the talking they do, they still can't fucking text or call back especially when it's pertinent to your education.

Lastly, I can't help you decide which dress to wear to your friend's-boyfriend's-single-best friend's semi-formal because I really don't give a fuck. I your hair can't hold a curl, then don't curl it. And if fiber makes you shit your pants, then don't eat it. I will not go to the bathroom with you to have conversations about where you'll be sleeping tonight, and I will not tell you if your dress shows your snatch.

So now that this is all out in the open for the approximately 10 girls that go to MTU, maybe you can learn from this. Sleep on it. Peace, love, and quit talking so fucking much. ☺ piece, but it went off on a crazy tangent once it got into the interview with the orignow, in order to properly prepare the pasta, you must first set your water to boil. After bringing the water to the correct boiling temperature you should add a pinch of salt to the water. This is key.

At this point you should be ready to add the pasta to the boiling water. How long you let the noodles boil is entirely dependent on your taste. I personally like my noodles to be a bit softer than al dente, so I'm going to leave them boiling for about eight to ten minutes. After they're done, strain the water out of the dish and start adding the final touches. Add your preferred sauce, gently sprinkle your preferred cheese and serve. Serves up to four. ☺

Article Noir: On the Dock

by George "The G" Long ~ Guest Writer

Isadore "Bones" Rizza stood immobile against the wind and rain. The sky was black, just like his mood. Bones was watching the water, the storm, and the glimmer of a light out on the water. Maybe. Was the boat there or not? "Damn, My eyes ain't good for this no more," he thought. Then, there it was, a small skiff under power. No cover, just three miserable examples of humanity losing the battle against this late autumn nor'easter.

He had been here before in better weather and just as bad, but this was one of the worst. A longshoreman shouldn't have to work on a night like this, but this was no normal job. He earned the nickname Bones because he knew where the bodies were all buried. He should, since he did the burying.

"Aye, pull along side there!" The response from the skiff was only partially audible but Bones could definitely make out that the pilot of the boat did not think well of his mother, or sister, or both. Bones had heard this all before.

The Pilot and his spotter would be feeding the crabs soon so who cares what they spout off about anyways.

"Hurry up now, what's your cargo for me tonight?" A rain soaked body of woman was tossed onto the dock in response. It took every ounce of Bones' experience and will to put a bullet into the pilot's head and the same for the spotter. To the cops, they will just be another couple of unexplained bodies on the Jersey shore. Hopefully, the skiff will capsize and the crabs will eat well tomorrow. Bones picked up the woman's body and walked against the rain. When he reached the back of the truck, he dropped the body. "Damn, I'm too old for this," he said. Possibly aloud, not that anyone could hear. He bent over and grabbed the figure. The body said, "What the hell, mister!" Bones blurted out, "Damn woman, who are you?" "I'm Gwendolyn Meriman, who the hell are you?"

Bones goggled. "Impossible!" he gasped. ☺
