Michigan Tech Mad Science: Creating Vita-Rays With Paper Clips, Bubble Gum and Pennies

By Chase Peterson ~ Daily Bull

Hopefully in the conquest of the world we can do it as peacefully as possible. However, there will be times when a good old fashion beat down will be required to get some people to fall into line. While henchmen are good cannon fodder, they don't exactly win the war, unless they have a name, complete back story (that does not include a significant other), and enough firepower to level a small city. Even with all the givens they still only stand a small chance of doing any real harm to the hero (maybe give him a bad hang nail or something). So we need to create our own super-soldiers from misunderstood youth (they are much easier to control, just tell them you understand them and offer to buy them booze). We are going to recreate the mysterious Vita-Rays that gave Captain America his awesome powers.

How can this be done? Why has this never been tried before? Why has the Bull's resident mad scientist taken on such a Herculean task? These are all legitimate questions that you can ask, and my answer will be a simple one: we need paper clips, bubble gum and pennies. As for why has this never been tried before, they just weren't as out in left field as me (or wherever I am, I can never keep track). As for why I'm taking this one on, one of my cell mates challenged me to come up with a viable way to replicate the Vita-Rays that gave Captain America his awesome powers using a paper clip, bubble gum and pennies. Clearly he has been reading the schlock I've been writing. Challenge accepted!

Vita-Rays are nothing more than fancy gamma rays that have extra photons, making them bright and shiny. The really easy part here is that gamma rays are already naturally occurring in space so all we need to do is to capture these space rays and redirect them through the sun to pick up extra photons and then back to earth. Now this one might take some extra thought . . . . not really.

ERIC JOHNSON OMG

By Olivia Zajac ~ Daily Bull

So, unless all of you have been living under a rock (which is technically possible with all the random ones lying all over campus), you've heard of Eric "White and Nerdy" Johnson. Eric has starred in multiple Tech-related videos and has found a way to process the number of 'likes' the videos get and turn it directly into an energy source for himself. So the more views that White and Nerdy, Plots, his super extra bonus denied graduation speech, and him crying over how much he loves ewoks, the longer he will actually stay alive.

We decided to meet in the Student Org office, and when he entered the room, pure white doves flew to announce his presence. He took a seat opposite me and we exchanged pleasantries.

OZ: So Eric, let's get down to business, I don't want to take up too much of your time during your last week of classes.

EJ: Nonsense. Classes are for losers. Just kidding. I love all my classes and professors. Please don't fail me; I'm too close to getting out!

OZ: You have multiple videos on YouTube that you've made. The ladies of campus (and some men too, I'm sure) are wondering if you have any super secret sex tapes that might leak online anytime soon?

EJ: *laughs* Oh, if only you knew how many. But no, none that will make it online. Sorry everyone. That Johnson isn't for everyone to view.

OZ: Alright, fair enough. Now, I've started to hear rumors of the way you manage to fuel yourself off of the views of your videos.

EJ: You know how your parents always told you to never stick a fork into the electric outlet? I basically do that, but with the USB port when my YouTube account is open. Like a weird version of photosynthesis.

OZ: That sure is interesting! What do you call this process?

EJ: Kamehameha. I yell that at my computer before I start the process. Then I have a power struggle with my computer until I win.

OZ: *laughs* So, if the views keep racking up, how long do you think you'll live, assuming that your body doesn't deteriorate or turn to cheese?

EJ: There are worse fates than turning to cheese. Then I might end up getting eaten by a Packer, and then being a part of them kicking total ass in the NFL. Any Wisconsinite's dream. But I digress. At the rate that my videos are being watched, I won't ever die. Isn't that awesome?

OZ: Unless, as you predicted, Mewtwo just ends humanity, right?

EJ: *laughs* Oh no, I'd kick his ass. I'd actually save humanity!

OZ: Well Eric, that's about all the info I'll be able to fit into an article. Thank you so much for your time!

EJ: Oh, it was my pleasure! Anything for a fellow Community fan!

There you have it. Eric "Me llamo T-bone" Johnson is now immortal due to YouTube. He's also going to save the world on December 21st. Make sure to high-five him on campus, while you have the chance!

We need to create a way to reflect the rays to where we need them to go, this is where the pennies come in, we need to melt them down and reform them into three huge reflective surfaces. Two we will launch into space and angle one through the sun and the other we will angle towards the Earth. With the last reflective surface, we will need to construct both a chamber to cram our future super soldiers into and a swivel base so we can properly aim everything. This is where the paper clips and bubble gum come in. The paper clips will form a basic frame with the bubble gum acting as an adhesive, holding the whole flimsy premise together.

After we get the whole thing together and calibrated, we just sit back and watch our army grow. 🐼
