Egyptian Child Balloon Air Corps Suffers Setback

by Jon "Big-O" Mahan ~ Daily Bull

As many of you are aware, the US gives money to many countries that experiment in and use child soldiers. One such lovely country is the country of Egypt. Under their new Muslim Brotherhood leadership, Egypt has adopted a new cheaper version of an Air Force named the Balloon Corps.

The Balloon Corps, or BC, is a regiment of hot air balloons piloted by children. While the program looked to be hitting new highs, the whole thing came crashing down in an accident outside of Cairo. Luckily, none of the children were harmed, thanks to them landing on the ample amounts of water balloons they drop from insane heights to hydrate and frighten the enemy.

The leader of Egypt is said to look into the costs and benefits of the program after the crash, stating that the costs were beginning to reach levels unsuitable for the country's finances. Perhaps the most expensive part would be the water balloons, which supports of the program have suggested replacing with oil. Or rocks, whichever is easier to come by. As of this moment, there is no word on the solution

The cause of the crash remains a mystery, but some are speculating that the children are to blame. Already the children involved in the crash are missing, leaving many to wonder how or why. In other news, the US has decided to give f-16's to Egypt, in the hopes this will all stop. Maybe. ☹

KSO

by Jeanine Chmielewski ~ Daily Bull

So it has officially happened folks: Michigan Tech has a music major! "There was much rejoicing," claimed Dr. Jared Anderson. "We have been waiting for this moment for so long." That's right, starting next year it will be possible for even YOU to receive a musically inclined major here at a tech school. No exams! No homework! No projects! No enterprises! Just practice, practice, practice (well, that and the occasional concert)!

"The KSO is starting a trial program this week." Dr. Joel Neves stated. "We have excused everyone in the orchestra of all obligations and responsibilities, because practicing is of the utmost importance to the success of the program." All of the student, faculty, and community members are involved. "I am really excited at this point," David Olson said. "Not because I don't have to teach, or host office hours, but because I don't have to grade!" "Best part for me, oh, that would be the 7 exams I don't have to take anymore," said an enthusiastic cellist.

"It was fine in the beginning but now things have just gotten out of hand," one anonymous viola player said. "He follows us everywhere to make sure we keep practicing! He won't ever let us stop." One bassist stated that on the windshield of her car in the morning the word 'practice' was written into the frost. "He has scary looking people following us places. We can't get out of it. It's getting bad, I mean how are we supposed to keep playing in the bathroom? We have bodily needs too!"

While the strings and woodwinds have had the intense encounters during rehearsals, one has to wonder how the brass are surviving. Well, you see, what they have done is find the most super-human beings to play the brass for this.

They have been genetically altered with cooperation from the biology department. "We have made them better, stronger, and with chops of steel," a proud professor stated. Therefore, if this trial process proves successful, we will already have the treatment for the other brass players in years to come. Since this is just a week long trial program for the music major, the intensity of the schedule is much less than normal. Once the major is instated the rehearsal schedule will be over 40 hours a week. This is to keep the students at full time. "40 hours of rehearsal total, at least 3 of the school ensembles, 5 chamber groups, and 7 solo performances a semester," said the head of the Visual and Performing Arts department. "We have to make sure these kids are prepared when they step out into the real world."

So, if you see any of these marvelous musicians coming out of one of their many rehearsals this week, congratulate them on being pioneers at this technological school for daring to try out a liberal arts program of the most severe sense. And remember to go to the concert this weekend at 7:30pm on Saturday. Students are FREE (at least money wise, we get to keep your soul)! 🐮
