Woman Seeks to Break Gender Barrier.

by Jon "Big O" Mahan ~ Daily Bull

A Russian born woman is seeking to break all kinds of stereotypes and boundaries to entry into the NFL by women that exist. Currently there are not many alternatives for women who seek to play football. Those that do exist are, at least in 1 case, demeaning and full of lingerie, thongs, and likely accidental disrobal, which is great for fans watching it; not so much for the players.

Russian born Anastasia Strovoski is hoping to change it all. Having competed in one of the combines already, she made a name for herself amongst the stars.

Scouts say that the woman hit harder than a lineman, ran as fast as a linebacker, and could catch the ball pretty well.

"By all means she's very qualified. Naturally though, just because someone is qualified doesn't mean they make it through. There are other factors at work. Hopefully a team needs what she brings."

Scouts also mentioned that while she showed potential, her lack of a college career could hamper her. One scout mentioned that "while you may have the skills at the recruitment session, we don't know how you handle under the pressure. After all, playing in a small school or combine is vastly different than playing in a professional game with hundreds of thou-

NEWS Whose Line is it Anyway to Make a Return!

by Jon 'Big-O' Mahan ~ Daily Bull

You're going to have to pardon the actual news and that for the most part, this story is just a rewrite of ACTUAL NEWS, but this news is too good to not be news.

As many of you know, Whose Line is it Anyway is like one of the best things to happen to television since television. Seriously hilarious. It seems that The CW is planning on reviving the show for all of it's dedicated fans who have watched reruns and clips on YouTube all these years.

It seems that ever since the tweet by Colin Mochrie, he's been slowly working to bring back the show. So far, Colin, Wayne, and Ryan are signed on. Drew Carry will not be returning to the show, however to replace him will be Aisha Tyler. Who's Aisha Tyler? Oh nobody but LANA from ARCHER. Yeah, let that sink in.

The show is supposedly keeping it's same general format as before with a few changes. There will still be a guest comedian on each episode with the main 3, and supposedly some of the segments will remain. I'm not really sure how the copyright and IP laws work here, but for our sakes I hope they work for the better!

In any case, the show will begin airing this summer with 10 episodes for sure. Depending on how well it is received, The CW may buy some more episodes, which means you all know what you need to do: Figure out what the fuck the CW is, and then buy it for your cable. DO IT YOU SIEVE. 🐮

This weekend, various people begged USG for money. I bet Rifle Club still asked for 10 million for a new range.

Pikachu Snatcher

by Anonymous Sender-Inner

One night in East McNair, a stealthy Pokémon trainer sought out the most famous Pokémon of all: Pikachu. After 5 poke balls, a snickers bar, and a bit of luck, Pikachu was finally captured. Freshman Courtney awoke the next morning to discover her beloved Pikachu was missing. "I was hoping that a cute boy took it and was keeping it for ransom," said Courtney. "I made missing posters in hopes that he would return Pikachu and claim his prize."

A few days later, she received a ransom note featuring a man in a gas mask and trench coat holding Pikachu. When asked how she felt about the Pikachu snatcher, she stated "He wasn't who I expected, but he could still be cute underneath the mask." In hopes of finally seeing the mystery man, Courtney waited at the vending machine to see who would collect the ransom. Suddenly, the elevator doors opened and out ran the man in a gas mask. He checked under the vending machine and noticed she didn't meet his demands, so off he ran into the night. A few hours later, a video of Pikachu being burnt to a crisp surfaced on Facebook. The Pikachu snatcher also replaced the name tag with a mutilated Pikachu.

"Maybe someday, I'll see the face of Pikachu's captor. But until then, I can only dream that it was either Fabio or Robert Pattinson." 🐾 sands if not millions watching your every move. That sort of pressure can really wear you down and change your performance."

Currently she is expected to be picked up in the 4th round sometime, assuming that she's not overlooked for some of her more... male competitors. Regardless, most scouts are expecting a provisional contract for 1 year for her to see how it works out.

One off the field concern remains for her and the men's locker-room, and some are wondering if they'll have to make a separate locker room just for her. When questioned she merely said "I have no problem showering with the guys. My high school was the same way."

The NFL has not yet mentioned their concerns on this aspect, but are likely to make a statement before signing. It is likely that the NFL will demand or otherwise subsidize the addition of a secondary locker-room to any stadiums that lack them should she be signed there, but no word yet. 🐾
