Student Takes Out Power Grid, Tech Still Open

by Jeremy 'Mr. Sunshine' Loucks ~ Daily Bull

HOUGHTON: Monday morning saw another snowstorm rolling into Houghton, dropping 4+ inches. While these storms are commonplace in the winter, it's getting into mid April, and the non-Yooper students are starting to get restless. Even with Tech closing for an unprecedented 1.5 days this year, it isn't enough for some. One commuter student, who will remain anonymous until the charges are dropped, took matters into their own hands.

At roughly 7:30am, Bob* groggily slapped his alarm clock's snooze for the 7th time, but realized he was going to be late. He hurriedly got dressed, then looked outside. Snow. Again. Yesterday it had been 45! He rapidly had to change into warmer, dirtier clothes, and rushed outside into the weather. Stumbling to scrape off his windows while his car warmed up, he cursed Michigan Tech for not closing in this atrocious weather. "Ugh, I wish this was like downstate," he thought. "At least there they just call things off for this slushy crap."

Rushing to his driver's side door, he slipped on the newly formed ice, falling right into a puddle of slushy, dirty water. Dripping sludge, he screamed at the heavens. "SERIOUSLY??!!!" He fell into his car, throwing his now soggy backpack onto the passenger seat. Bob threw it into drive....and the tires spun a bit. He was stuck in the slush. Frantically he rocked the car back and forth, finally breaking free after three tense minutes, with words that would have made a sailor blush. He still had time to make it to class!

How to Steal Food From a Fancy Tech Event

by Olivia Zajac ~ Daily Bull

First things first, make sure at least one other person is aware of your intentions to smuggle out food, so they can keep an extra eye out for anyone who may or may not try to stop you. You should also come prepared with Tupperware/ other food holding and transportation apparatuses. This will help to minimize the mess. Let's pick a venue. Say, a banquet set aside each spring for all the coaches who work in the learning centers. PERFECT. They always have cheesecake, which, in my experience, has turned out to be pretty easy to smuggle.

Next, get your damn food. Let's be honest, you should be more concerned with filling your belly at the event than after, so stuff yourself until you feel your pants digging into that food baby you just made. Only grab one piece of cheesecake to start, lest you raise suspicions from the caterers in their fancy yellow bow ties. When the next person at your table goes up for dessert, go up with them. Grab at least 2 more and mention that you're grabbing them for some friends. Take them back to your table, and set them about so you don't look like a total fatass.

Repeat this at least one more time, depending on the amount of Tupperware you have stashed in your backpack. By now, there should be about 4-7 plates with little slices of cheesecake heaven on them, spread before you. Now comes the tricky part. Hold an open Tupperware container between your knees/legs, and cover your lap with your fancy cloth napkin. As you are casually talking to your fellow coaches, grab a piece of cheesecake and squirrel it away between your legs. Now, if anyone says anything, tell them

Pic O'The Day: Well, Are You?

"Daddy, you can't expect me to stay here. It's like Hogwarts for pikeys!"
--Annabelle Fritton (Tallulah Riley), St. Trinian's

All things that happen in British boarding schools in film are absolutely 100% true. Everyone flies on brooms and is part of a criminal empire all at once.

Cutting down Portage avenue to save time, his small car bravely fought the hill. His brakes squealed and the car lurched, but it he was making good time. He knew that the area by Montezuma was especially sketchy in bad weather, so he was going to avoid it by swinging onto Houghton ave. However...his car would have none of that. Skidding sideways, screaming like a girl at a Bieber concert, his small sedan drifted inevitably towards the busy street below.

He had two options: try to aim for the parking lot and potentially hit some parked cars, or aim directly at the electric pole next to it. As his life flew past his eyes (BEER, dumb pranks, DETROIT CITY), he realized that it was now or never. With all of his strength, he cranked the wheel and aimed directly at the pole. "If I'm going down, I'm taking the power with me!" he cackled as he slid onto Montezuma.

Sadly for Bob, it was not his car that hit the pole. He hit a pickup, which hit a minivan, which hit a sled-dog team, which then careened into a logging truck, which flipped over and pushed the Jimmy Johns delivery guy (off duty) into the power pole in a Rube Goldberg-esque series of crashes. And indeed, power was lost...for downtown. Tech of course had no troubles.

As Bob was carted off to the hospital, he cursed his luck. "I HATE MONDAYS!"

It probably looked a little like this, don't you think? One must go out with a bang!

they're being rude to question what goes on between your legs. Continue this process. Stack empty plates under a variety of other cheesecake plates, to evenly distribute the evidence and raise less suspicion. Cover the container, put it back into your backpack, and hope your food doesn't like, melt, or whatever it is that cheesecake does when it gets warm.

Maybe, just maybe, you're being a good friend and coach, and wanted to share in the celebration of cheesecake with some of your buddies who have a stupidly timed lab and had to miss the glorious event. In this case, you're going to need some forks to go with that smuggled sugar concoction reaching closer to room temperature with your design homework. Accidentally drop fork, throw it into backpack. Repeat process with either the dessert or salad fork or whichever. Look around with shifty eyes. Success.

After event is over, haul ass to the appropriate building, and deliver cheesecake unto your friends that are stuck in lab. They will be forever grateful, and are now unknowingly indebted to you, for a future favor. Savor it, for they might be a day that they can return the cheese cake-y goodness unto you! 🙏

Living Life on the Edge

by Veronica Tabor ~ Daily Bull

Through the monotony of classes and studying, students find it difficult to find time to add spice into their mundane lives. When you get up at 7AM every morning, go to class, work at your job, do homework, and go to bed, things tend to get a bit bland. Sometimes we don't need extreme changes in our lives to make them more exciting; but it can be the little things that count. I've compiled a list of simple changes you can make to your day, and you'll be sure to see intense results in the long run.

- Eat a can of tuna the day after it expires
- Sneeze loudly on the 3rd floor of the library
- Look left, right, and DON'T look left again when crossing the street
- Don't wait 2 minutes for your pizza rolls to cool when you take them out of the microwave
- You can make it across the crosswalk before that car comes, right?
- Steal a balloon (just make sure it's not Free Balloon Day first)
- Eat soup with a fork
- Ride a unicycle to class without proper training
- Stay in the dining hall until they kick you out
- Stay up until MIDNIGHT (on a school night OMG!)
- Talk to a ginger
- Write for The Daily Bull

Take heed to this advice. If you make any of these changes, be prepared to have swarms of admirers following you around commenting on how much of a badass you are. Whether or not you want to interpret it as sarcasm is up to you. 🙏
